Executive summary

In August 2007, UNHCR issued its Eligibility Guidelines for Assessing the International Protection Needs of Iraqi Asylum-seekers (“Eligibility Guidelines”).¹ The purpose of the Guidelines was to facilitate the assessment of the international protection needs of Iraqi asylum-seekers. In this respect, they would assist, among others, those responsible for the adjudication of individual claims for refugee status and those involved in the establishment of government policy in relation to Iraqi asylum-seekers. They complement UNHCR’s Return Advisory and Position on International Protection Needs of Iraqis outside Iraq of 18 December 2006 (corrigendum April 2007).²

The Eligibility Guidelines were based primarily on information up to mid-February 2007. In response to requests for updated country of origin information on the situation in Central and Southern Iraq, particularly in light of recent development in those regions of the country, UNHCR is now issuing an Addendum to update the Eligibility Guidelines in this regard. The focus of this update is on developments in Central and Southern Iraq from February to November 2007. While there have been developments in the three Northern Governorates of Sulaymaniyah, Erbil and Dahuk during this period, particularly in relation to tensions at the border with Turkey, these are not addressed in this Addendum, as, on the whole, they have not been as significant with regard to the international protection considerations for asylum-seekers from Iraq.

The Addendum deals primarily with the significant security and political developments between February and November 2007. It covers a number of key topics and issues that were originally addressed in the Eligibility Guidelines, such as the general security situation, sectarian violence, sectarian segregation, and political reconciliation. Other topics are addressed for the first time in the Addendum and include the “surge” of U.S. troops, the development of “awakening” movements (tribal and insurgency groups turning against Al-Qa’eda in Iraq), the “freeze” of activities of the Jaish Al-Mahdi (Mehdi Army), and the handover of security and increasing Shi’ite-on-Shi’ite violence in Southern Iraq.

The information shows that there have indeed been some improvements in the security situation in parts of Central Iraq. The most noteworthy security development is the significant decrease in sectarian killings and overall civilian casualties. The level of human rights abuses and sectarian and intra-sectarian violence, however, remains high in Central and Southern Iraq. Civilian casualties are still at a high level, with acts of targeted violence, including car bombings, suicide attacks, small arms engagements, kidnappings and extra-judicial killings a regular occurrence in many parts of Central and Southern Iraq, although the intensity varies from Governorate to Governorate. Political and sectarian assassinations, abductions and killings of journalists, other professionals, members of religious and ethnic minority groups, persons not considered to be following “Islamic” rules and former Ba’athists remain a reality. The Iraqi Security Forces continue to face serious challenges in maintaining law and order.

² UNHCR, UNHCR Return Advisory and Position on International Protection Needs of Iraqis Outside Iraq, 18 December 2006 (Corr., April 2007), available in UNHCR’s Refworld at <http://www.unhcr.org/cgi-bin/texis/vtx/refworld/rwmain?docid=46371aa72>.

In terms of political developments, the Addendum highlights, among others, a unity accord which was signed in late August 2007 by senior Shi'ite and Sunni Arab and Kurdish political leaders, in which they agreed to release thousands of prisoners being held without charge. The accord also signaled efforts to foster greater national reconciliation. However, despite the accord, passage of key legislation on issues such as oil, de-Ba'athification, the disarmament of militias and provincial elections continues to be stalled. The Government remains weakened by the withdrawal from the Iraq cabinet of several political factions including the Sadr and Sunni blocs. Many of the hoped-for political advances in Iraq have not yet occurred. The situation remains highly volatile and unpredictable.

Both internal and external displacement continues to occur, due to serious human rights violations and sectarian and intra-sectarian violence. Displaced persons find it increasingly difficult to move both within Iraq as well as to neighbouring countries given more restrictive entry policies implemented at Governorate and state borders. On the other hand, a major development in the period since the Eligibility Guidelines were issued is that there have been returns of displaced Iraqis, both within the country and from outside. Several key aspects of these movements, however, remain unknown or unclear. The number of returns appears to be relatively modest. Clear trends regarding the returns cannot be established, nor can the motives behind them or their sustainability. From the testimonies provided by returnees interviewed by UNHCR concerning their reasons for returning and the objective situation in Iraq, UNHCR could not conclude that the returns signal a situation which would warrant, at this stage, a change in its position concerning Iraqi asylum-seekers.

The updated information does not show that in the period between February and December 2007, even the most positive security and political improvements have yet translated into political reconciliation, the building of strong and non-sectarian state institutions, the re-establishment of law and order, reconstruction and the adequate provision of services. UNHCR is thus maintaining the position, set out in the Eligibility Guidelines originally, with regard to assessing the international protection needs of Iraqi asylum-seekers. In brief, that position is as follows:

With regard to Iraqi asylum-seekers from Central and Southern Iraq:

- UNHCR considers Iraqi asylum-seekers from Central and Southern Iraq to be in need of international protection.
- Iraqi asylum-seekers from Central and Southern Iraq should be considered as refugees based on the 1951 Convention criteria.
- Where such asylum-seekers are not recognized under the 1951 Convention refugee criteria, international protection should be afforded through the application of an extended refugee definition, or otherwise through a complementary form of protection.
- UNHCR considers that an internal flight or relocation alternative (IFA/IRA) in Central and Southern Iraq is on the whole not available. When, however, the availability of an internal flight or relocation alternative must be assessed in a national procedure, it should be examined cautiously, taking into account the particular circumstances of the applicant. The question of the availability of an IFA/IRA in the three Northern Governorates for individuals from Central and Southern Iraq must be carefully assessed on a case-by-case basis, taking into consideration, in particular, the relevance and reasonableness analysis in the Eligibility Guidelines.

As concerns Iraqi asylum-seekers from the three Northern Governorates:

- The international protection needs of asylum-seekers from the three Northern Governorates should be individually assessed based on the 1951 Convention refugee definition. In cases where an asylum-seeker is not recognized as a refugee under the 1951 Convention but nevertheless demonstrates protection needs for which complementary forms of protection may be appropriate, the case should be assessed accordingly.
- UNHCR considers that there is no IFA/IRA available for asylum-seekers from the three Northern Governorates in Central and Southern Iraq. Whether an IFA/IRA may be available for them within the three Northern Governorates themselves must be examined carefully on a case-by-case basis. Special attention should be paid to the categories of individuals highlighted in the Eligibility Guidelines who clearly would not be able to find an IFA/IRA in the three Northern Governorates.

In all cases, due attention should be paid to possible grounds for exclusion, in accordance with Article 1(F) of the 1951 Convention.

I. Introduction

As highlighted in UNHCR's Eligibility Guidelines for Assessing the International Protection Needs of Iraqi Asylum-seekers of August 2007, for several years, the situation in many parts of Iraq has been marked by sectarian killings, large-scale suicide attacks, roadside bombs, and fighting between insurgency groups and the MNF-I/ISF, which have all resulted in high civilian casualties and displacement.³ The country has been plagued by a general collapse of the law and order system and violence perpetuated for sectarian or political reasons.

In this Addendum, which updates the Eligibility Guidelines with country of origin information on Central and Southern Iraq from February to November 2007, Section II provides an overview of the major political and security developments over the last year.⁴ These have been primarily of a military nature and include the increase of US troops in and around Baghdad (the “surge”),⁵ the emergence of armed conflict between Sunni tribes and insurgent groups on the one hand, and against Al-Qa’eda in Iraq (AQI) on the other,⁶ and the declared freeze of the Jaish Al-Mahdi (Mehdi Army) activities.⁷ Section II also examines sectarian segregation, the hand-over of security in Southern Iraq, the escalation of intra-Shi’ite violence, and civilian security. The widely reported recent returns of displaced persons from places of internal and external displacement is also addressed.

The effects of these developments on the security situation are set out, Governorate by Governorate, in Section III (Central Iraq) and Section IV (Southern Iraq). It will be seen that there has been a partial improvement of the security situation in Central Iraq with a decreasing number of attacks,⁸ sectarian killings and overall civilian casualties,⁹ although, in other parts, civilian casualties remain high. Some insurgent groups, in order to avoid confrontation with the MNF-I/ISF have moved to other Governorates, which have since seen the number of violent incidents rise. In Southern Iraq, these military developments have had little effect on the security situation, and an escalation in intra-Shi’ite violence has been observed.¹⁰

⁸ The US military reported on 15 November 2007 a sharp decrease in the number of roadside bombs and other homemade explosive devices in Iraq with 1,560 IED directed at the MNF-I or Iraqis identified in October 2007, down after a steady monthly decline from 3,239 in March. However, the military conceded that 1,560 was still a “significant number”; Stephen Farrell, Fewer Roadside Bombs in Iraq, U.S. Says, The New York Times, 16 November 2007, <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/16/world/middleeast/16iraq.html>. On 12 November 2007 the US military announced that rocket and mortar attacks in Iraq have dipped to their lowest level since February 2006; one day earlier, Prime Minister Al-Maliki said that car bombs and roadside bombings in Baghdad had dropped by 77% compared to levels prior to the launch of the “surge”; BBC, Iraq rocket fire ‘falls sharply’, 12 November 2007, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7090535.stm.

II. Major political and security developments

I. The “Surge”

Since February 2007, there has been a gradual increase of US troops in Baghdad, Al-Anbar and the so-called “Baghdad belt”.¹¹ In addition, the MNF-I/ISF has led several large-scale security operations against armed groups.¹²

In testimony to Congress on 10 and 11 September 2007, General David H. Petraeus, the MNF-I Commander in Iraq, reported that this “surge” of US troops, as it is known, had led to a reduction of AQI’s capabilities and the disruption of Shi’ite militia extremists.¹³ According to General Petraeus, “the military objectives of the surge are, in large measure, being met,” with “(t)he security situation in Iraq(...) improving.”¹⁴

The increased US military presence has helped prevent large-scale attacks and reduce the sectarian killings that had become a common occurrence in Baghdad and other areas of Central Iraq. These incidents have, however, by no means ceased. There continue to be regular car bombs, suicide attacks, small arms fire and mortar attacks, targeting the MNF-I/ISF and the civilian population. The most recent incidents in Baghdad and other areas of Central Iraq show that the situation remains highly fragile with armed groups still capable of operating and causing civilian casualties. For example, on 1 December 2007, dozens of suspected AQI fighters raided the Shi’ite village of Duwailiya in the Governorate of Diyala, killing at least 14 people, including women and children, and destroying ten houses.¹⁵ On 23 November 2007, a bomb exploded at Al-Ghazl pet market in central Baghdad, killing at least 13 people and injuring 60 others.¹⁶ One day earlier, on 22 November 2007, ten mortar bombs landed inside Baghdad’s heavily fortified Green Zone, which houses the US and British embassies, the Iraqi parliament and many government ministries. The same day, suspected AQI fighters launched a surprise attack on the ISF and armed tribal members in the Hur Rijab area in southern

Baghdad, using rocket-propelled grenades and automatic weapons. The attack sparked a fierce battle, reportedly leaving at least two dozen people dead.¹⁷

There are indications that the main players in the violence in Iraq, i.e. AQI and the Mehdi Army, have not been totally defeated.¹⁸ Reportedly, many AQI extremists relocated further east and north to avoid confrontation with the MNF-I/ISF and their tribal allies.¹⁹ Indeed, the Governorates of Diyala, Salah Al-Din, Kirkuk and Ninewa have all seen high levels of insecurity, including several of the most high-profile attacks, in 2007. The Mehdi Army, which kept a rather low profile in recent months in Baghdad and officially froze its activities as of late August 2007,²⁰ is said to have partially relocated to the Southern Governorates, where it is now involved in ongoing battles with other Shi'ite groups.²¹ Muqtada Al-Sadr,²² the radical cleric who formed the Mehdi Army in 2003, is said to be reasserting control over it, including by allowing the US military to pursue disloyal elements.²³ According to some observers, fighting by AQI and the Mehdi Army could re-ignite on a large scale once the “surge” ebbs.²⁴

¹⁸ General Petraeus assessed in late October 2007 that AQI no longer operates in large numbers in any neighborhood of Baghdad. But he also cautioned, saying that “(t)hey remain very lethal, very dangerous, capable at any point in time, if you will, of coming back off the canvas and landing a big punch, and we have to be aware of that;”; Joshua Partlow and Amit R. Paley, Sunni Violence in Baghdad Called Disrupted, The Washington Post, 28 October 2007, <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/10/27/AR2007102701460.html>. On the same day, The Washington Post newspaper reported that “the US military believed it has dealt devastating and possibly irreversible blows to the terrorist organization in Iraq in recent months, leading some generals to advocate a declaration of victory over the group.” According to Lt. Gen. Raymond T. Odierno, the second-ranking US commander in Iraq, AQI’s support structures and supply lines had been weakened and their capabilities have been “degraded” by 60 to 70% since early 2007; Thomas E. ²⁴ Robert Malley and Peter Harling of the ICG draw parallels between the Baghdad “surge” and “Operation Sinbad” in Basrah, which “at best, froze in place the existing situation and balance of power, creating an illusory stability that concealed a brutal and collective tug-of-war-in-waiting. Once the

There are also concerns over the security situation that will follow a (gradual) withdrawal of US troops and other MNF-I forces.²⁵ The US is in the process of pulling out some forces in the Governorates of Al-Anbar and Diyala²⁶ and is expected to return to pre-“surge” levels by July 2008, leaving roughly 130,000 troops in Iraq.²⁷ Given the lack of political reconciliation²⁸ and prevailing sectarianism within the ISF,²⁹ several experts believe that sectarian killings could once more escalate.³⁰ The US Special Inspector General for Iraq Reconstruction warned, in October 2007, that

“(I)n areas that included mixed Sunni-Shia populations, we were told, the departure of U.S. forces would produce open battlegrounds of ethnic cleansing.”³¹

British version of the surge ebbed, the struggle reignited.” They predict that “even should the armed opposition weaken, even should sectarian tensions abate, and even should the surge momentarily succeed, Basra’s fate is likely to be replicated throughout the country on a larger, more chaotic, and more dangerous scale”; see: Robert Malley and Peter Harling, A lesson in Iraqi illusion, The Boston Globe, 8 July 2007, http://www.boston.com/news/globe/editorial_opinion/oped/articles/2007/07/08/a_lesson_in_iraqi_illusion/. ²⁸ See below Section II.5: Political reconciliation.

²⁹ According to the most recent GAO report, the Iraqi Government has made limited progress in developing effective and non-sectarian forces despite intense US efforts to train and equip about 360,000 Iraqi soldiers and police officers with the aim of gradually transferring security responsibilities to them, and, ultimately, withdrawing US troops from Iraq. It assessed that the ISF have grown in size and are increasingly leading counterinsurgency operations, but by September 2007, only about 10 of 140 Iraqi Army, National Police and Special Operations Forces are operating independently from the MNF-I; GAO, Securing, Stabilizing and Rebuilding Iraq, GAO Audits and Key Oversight Issues, Testimony Before the Committee on Appropriations, Subcommittee on State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs, U.S. House of Representatives, 30 October 2007, p. 8, <http://www.gao.gov/new.items/d08231t.pdf> (further: “GAO, Iraq Report October 2007”). With regard to the Iraq Army, the USDoD assessed that “the development of a unified, nonsectarian force that will be capable of securing the country in the event of a withdrawal of Coalition forces is hampered by the loyalty of soldiers within many military units to their tribal and ethno-sectarian or political affiliations and associated militias;” USDoD, Measuring Stability and Security in Iraq, Report to Congress In accordance with the Department of Defense Appropriations Act 2007 (Section 9010, Public Law 109-289), September 2007, p. 31, <http://www.defenselink.mil/pubs/pdfs/Signed-Version-070912.pdf> (further: “USDoD, Measuring Stability and Security in Iraq September 2007”). An assessment prepared by a commission of retired senior US military officers and headed by retired Marine General James Jones, said that Iraq’s Army and Special Forces, despite some progress made, will be unable to take over internal security from US forces in the next 12 to 18 months. The MoI, it says, is “dysfunctional” and is “a ministry in name only” with “sectarianism and corruption being pervasive” and crippling “the ministry’s ability to (...) provide internal security for Iraqi citizens.” It assessed the Iraqi Police as “incapable today of providing security at a level sufficient to protect Iraqi neighbourhoods from insurgents and sectarian violence.” Further it also described the 25,000-member Iraqi National Police as “ineffective” and riddled with sectarianism. The commission recommended that the National Police be disbanded and reorganized; Independent Commission on the Security Forces of Iraq, The Report of the Independent Commission on the Security Forces of Iraq, 6 September 2007, <http://media.csis.org/isf.pdf> (further: “Jones report September 2007”).

³⁰ See below Section II.4: Sectarian segregation.

This is of particular concern for formerly mixed areas, where one group has temporarily driven out its rivals, and in areas where homogenous Sunni and Shi'ite neighborhoods border each other.³²

2. “Awakening” movements

In late 2006, Sunni tribes³³ and former insurgent groups³⁴ in Al-Anbar Governorate began to turn against AQI, which had its stronghold there. In early 2007, the US military started to support and train these groups, which it calls “concerned local citizens” or “auxiliary security forces”. It encouraged these “awakening” movements to spread into other Governorates, including Baghdad,³⁵ Diyala,³⁶ Salah Al-Din,³⁷

³³ Sheikh Abdul Sattar Abu Risha, a Sunni tribal leader in Al-Anbar Governorate, was instrumental in forming the “Anbar Awakening” a coalition of tribal sheikhs and former Sunni insurgent groups to fight AQI in the Governorate. Tribal and insurgent leaders had become increasingly frustrated with the behaviour of the extremists, who were trying to enforce their hard-line interpretation of Islamic law, assassinated tribal and insurgent figures, threatened tribes’ local interests and claimed a leading role in the Sunni insurgency. US President George W. Bush met Sheikh Abu Risha and other tribal leaders during a highly symbolic trip to Al-Anbar Governorate on 3 September 2007. On 13 September 2007, Sheikh Abu Risha was assassinated outside his home in Al-Anbar’s capital Ramadi. Sheikh Abu Risha’s brother Ahmed took over the leadership of the movement and vowed to continue the fight against AQI; see: VOA, Al-Qaida Claims Responsibility for Killing of Sunni Tribal Leader, 14 September 2007, <http://www.voanews.com/english/2007-09-14-voa10.cfm>; BBC, Obituary: Abdul Sattar Abu Risha, 13 September 2007, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/6993370.stm; Mark Kukis, Turning Iraq’s Tribes Against Al-Qaeda, Time, 26 December 2006, <http://www.time.com/time/world/article/0,8599,1572796,00.html>.

³⁴ Including the Islamic Army in Iraq, the 1920 Revolution Brigades and the Mujaheddin Army. The Islamic Army in Iraq, the largest Sunni insurgent group consisting mainly of former Ba’athists and army officers, severed its ties with AQI after several months of infighting in April 2007. The group nevertheless said that it remained committed to its opposition to the Iraqi Government and the presence of foreign troops in the country; Al Jazeera, Iraqi group ‘splits’ from al-Qaeda, 12 April 2007, http://www.iraqupdates.com/p_articles.php/article/16414; ibidem, Sunni group condemns Iraq al-Qaeda, 6 April 2007, <http://english.aljazeera.net/NR/exeres/A6EC4EAB-854C-4D2F-A922-754648CDED8D.htm>. Such “concerned citizens” man checkpoints, conduct patrols and provide the MNF-I/ISF with intelligence on insurgent activities, using their local knowledge and contacts.⁴¹

AQI responded to the “awakening” movements by announcing an assassination campaign against leaders of Sunni tribal and insurgent groups, as well as civilians cooperating with them or criticizing AQI. It said it had formed “special security committees” to “assassinate the tribal figures, the traitors, who stained the reputations of the real tribes by submitting to the soldiers of the Crusade.” It also posted a list of names of tribal leaders on the internet, some with photos. The faces of those killed were crossed out. A significant number of tribal leaders have been assassinated in 2007 by AQI.⁴²

Similarly, local Shi’ite tribal movements hostile to the Mehdi Army and its perceived links with Iran, and frustrated with fighting among rival militias, have been emerging in the Babel, Wassit, Diwaniyah and Kerbala Governorates.⁴³ It was reported in October

2007 that “relations ha[d] soured” between the Mehdi Army and Shi’ites in several Shi’ite neighbourhoods in Baghdad. Reportedly, residents accuse the Mehdi Army of criminal acts, including the killing of Shi’ite civilians.⁴⁴ Popular resistance against the Mehdi Army may not, however, become as widespread as Sunni resistance against AQI, due to its hardline brand of Islam and indiscriminate killing of civilians which have alienated many Sunnis.⁴⁵

The US has expressed hope that its cooperation with these new “auxiliary security forces” will produce political reconciliation from the “bottom up”, given that reconciliation efforts at the national level have stalled.⁴⁶ These initiatives have been acknowledged to have contributed to a reduction in violence.⁴⁷ On the other hand, tribal and insurgent fighters, who engage in assassinations and detention of alleged AQI fighters, largely do not operate under clear military command structures, and their loyalty is not always clear.⁴⁸ The Iraqi Government, though generally supporting the “awakening” movements,⁴⁹ has on several occasions expressed concern, if not outright opposition, to US support of what it considers to be new militias, fearing that they may turn against the Government once AQI has been defeated.⁵⁰ Certain members of the awakening movements may even be new actors of persecution.⁵¹ The Iraqi Government has so far been reluctant to make significant political concessions to the Sunni Arab resistance and to include large numbers of tribal and insurgent fighters in the regular ISF.⁵² As a result, there is a risk of a continued proliferation of armed groups in Iraq, further undermining the Government's monopoly on the legitimate use of force.⁵³

⁵⁰ In particular as the "Anbar model" is applied in Baghdad and other mixed Governorates, the Iraqi Government has expressed its unease and in some cases outright opposition; for example, in October 2007, a group of tribesmen from Al-Anbar were brought into Baghdad's Saidiyah neighbourhood ("Saidiyah Awakening") to clamp down on JAM militia. This move was condemned by the Iraqi Government, which accused the tribal fighters of abusing their authority and being involved in kidnappings, killings and extortion; Sabah Jerges, Iraqi leaders turn against US-created 'militias', Middle East Online, 5 October 2007, http://www.iraqupdates.com/p_articles.php/article/22563. ⁵² According to senior US military officials, the Iraqi Government has so far resisted to incorporate the nearly 70,000 tribal and insurgent fighters into the regular ISF, fearing that they could turn against the Government. Reportedly, only about 1,600 of the "volunteers" have been trained and sworn in to the ISF, mainly the police; Joshua Partlow and Ann Scott Tyson, Hurdles Stall Plan For Iraqi Recruits, The Washington Post, 12 November 2007, http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/11/AR2007111101730_pf.html. At the same time, Prime Minister Al-Maliki announced the recruitment of 18,000 members of Shi'ite militias (Badr Organization and Dawa) into the ISF. The decision sparked anger and deep concern from several political factions, particularly Sunni groups who accuse the ISF of being infiltrated by Shi'ite militias; Alwan Hussain, More militia members join army, police, Azzaman, 13 November 2007, <http://www.azzaman.com/english/index.asp?fname=news/2007-11-9/ed.htm>. In particular in areas with mixed populations (e.g. Baghdad, Diyala, Babel), there are concerns that these tribal and insurgent groups have now become yet another party to the sectarian conflict.⁵⁴

Finally, it should be noted that the “awakening” movement is not a monolithic bloc, but consists of various actors with more or less legitimacy within the Sunni community and may eventually engage in feuds against each other over economic, political and military influence.⁵⁵

3. “Freeze” of Mehdi Army activities

The Eligibility Guidelines had highlighted that the Jaish Al-Mahdi (or Mehdi Army) is considered responsible for the murder and displacement of Sunnis by death squads in the country.⁵⁶ During the “surge”, it maintained a low profile, avoiding direct confrontation with the MNF-I.⁵⁷ In late August 2007, Al-Sadr ordered the temporary “freeze” of all activities of the Mehdi Army. This move was made in order to pursue rogue elements of the movement, restore internal discipline and improve the Mehdi Army’s public image.⁵⁸

Renewed involvement of Mehdi Army in fighting, in particular in Southern Iraq,⁵⁹ has raised doubts over Al-Sadr’s intentions and/or his ability to control the more radical elements of his movement.⁶⁰ According to the US Department of Defense (USDoD), the freeze of activities “will likely only apply to mainstream JAM elements, while specialized JAM units will probably continue violence aimed at Coalition forces and JAM rivals.”⁶¹ In October 2007, Al-Sadr said the freeze remained in force and may be renewed if considered beneficial.⁶²

While the US military had previously focused on fighting Sunni insurgent groups, in recent months it increased its efforts in combating rogue Mehdi Army elements (so-called “Special Groups”).⁶³ It also started to tacitly work with moderate Mehdi Army elements to stabilize Baghdad neighborhoods.⁶⁴ This has, reportedly, led to a reduction of sectarian killings in Baghdad.⁶⁵ However, based on past experience,⁶⁶ it is believed that Al-Sadr may be keeping his forces intact in anticipation of a US withdrawal from Iraq.⁶⁷

⁶³ US General Petraeus and Ambassador Ryan C. Crocker concluded that, with the influence of Sunni insurgent groups diminishing, Shi'ite extremists pose a rising threat to the US effort in Iraq. 4. Sectarian segregation

The issue of sectarian segregation was addressed to a limited extent in the Eligibility Guidelines.⁶⁸ It is now addressed more fully in this update due to its increasing relevance and importance as a feature of Iraqi society. Analysts say that one of the reasons for the drop in violence in Central Iraq is the scale of sectarian “cleansing” that has occurred in formerly mixed Sunni and Shi’ite areas. For example, the recent National Intelligence Estimate (NIE) on Iraq said that

“(w)here population displacements have led to significant sectarian separation, conflict levels have diminished to some extent because warring communities find it more difficult to penetrate communal enclaves.”⁶⁹

This is most evident in Baghdad. A US official reported that whereas Baghdad had a 65% Sunni-majority population in 2003, it has now become a 75-80% Shi’a-majority city.⁷⁰ The neighbourhood of Hurriyah, formerly Sunni-Shi’ite mixed, has become only Shi’ite. The District of Rashid, once an area with a majority Sunni population, has now a population of about 70% Shi’ite.⁷¹ In Baghdad, Shi’ites now constitute a clear majority in more than half of all neighborhoods and Sunni areas have become surrounded by predominately Shi’ite districts.⁷² Reportedly, Baghdad has become more segregated with the Sunnis living in “ghettos encircled by concrete blast walls to stop militia attacks and car bombs.”⁷³ In the remaining mixed neighbourhoods, mainly in the southwest of the city, sectarian violence continues to occur and unidentified bodies continue to appear daily, though in lower numbers than before.⁷⁴

While sectarian segregation may have resulted in a decrease in sectarian violence in some areas of Baghdad, sectarian violence remains high in other areas of the capital and elsewhere in the country.⁷⁵ Actors of sectarian violence, i.e. AQI, Shi’ite militias and the Shi’ite-dominated ISF, are still operational.⁷⁶ As indicated in the Eligibility Guidelines,⁷⁷ AQI aims at provoking sectarian violence between Iraq’s Shi’ite and

Sunni communities and among Arabs and Kurds. This phenomenon continues.⁷⁸ While high-profile attacks against Shi'ite mosques such as the Samarra Mosque bombing on 13 June 2007⁷⁹ and the Al-Khailani Mosque bombing in Rusafa on 19 June 2007⁸⁰ failed to provoke widespread sectarian violence as was the case in 2006,⁸¹ it is expected that AQI will continue such operations,⁸² and sectarian violence will remain high in Iraq over the next six to twelve months.⁸³

5. Political reconciliation

The US military and independent experts agree that military force alone will not be sufficient to halt the violence in Iraq.⁸⁴ Rather, from the outset, the Baghdad Security Plan was intended to provide “breathing space” for the Government to take political steps towards national reconciliation.⁸⁵ However, as Vali Nasr, a CFR Middle East expert, put it: “It is the political impasse that is causing the security problem, and it is the political impasse that has to be solved if there is to be an end to the fighting.”⁸⁶

To date, political reconciliation among Iraq's warring factions has been limited.⁸⁷ In late August 2007, a unity accord was signed by senior Shi'ite and Sunni Arab and Kurdish political leaders, in which they agreed to release thousands of prisoners being held without charge. The unity accord signalled efforts to foster greater national reconciliation.⁸⁸ Despite the accord, however, passage of legislation key to political stability in Iraq (i.e. on oil,⁸⁹ reversal of “De-Ba'athification”, provincial elections, amnesty to insurgents, disarmament of militias, and the revision of the constitution)

continues to be stalled.⁹⁰ The US has called on Iraq's leaders to take advantage of the improved security situation to make progress towards reconciliation, noting that otherwise Iraq risked "falling back to the more violent patterns of the past".⁹¹

The withdrawal of several political groups⁹² from the Government has also weakened the "national unity government" of Prime Minister Al-Maliki and has further set back hopes of reconciliation. The ongoing deadlock over the fate of three senior military officials of the former regime of Saddam Hussein found guilty of war crimes, puts further strain on the already weak Government.⁹³

⁹⁰ For an overview of key political developments in Iraq, see UN SC, Report October 2007, Section II, see above footnote 13. In remarks to the Washington Post, Lt. Gen. ⁹² Politicians loyal to Shi'ite cleric Muqtada Al-Sadr quit the Government on 15 April 2007 in protest at Prime Minister Al-Maliki's refusal to set a timetable for the withdrawal of the MNF-I from Iraq, leaving six cabinet posts vacant. In August 2007, the largest Sunni Arab faction in the Council of Representatives (CoR), the Iraqi Accordance Front (IAF), pulled out its five ministers as well Deputy Prime Minister Sallam Al-Zawbaie, accusing the Government of sectarianism. On 26 August 2007, the secular political alliance Iraqi National List, led by former Prime Minister Iyad Allawi, withdrew from the Government, saying that its 14 demands to the Government, including reconsidering the law on terrorism, purging the ISF of "disloyal elements" and suspending the De-Ba'athification law pending the enactment of a new law, were not considered. The alliance had held five posts in the Government. On 30 October 2007, the CoR approved two new ministers (health, agriculture), though not without controversy, with the IAF calling the vote "illegal" because of the lack of the required quorum; VOI, IAF says parliament's decision to appoint two ministers "illegal", 30 October 2007, http://www.iraqupdates.com/p_articles.php/article/23477. ⁹³ The three men, Ali Hassan Al-Majid ("Chemical Ali"), Hussein Rashid Al-Tikriti, a senior military chief, and former Defence Minister Sultan Hashem, were sentenced to death by the Iraqi High Tribunal in June 2007 for their role during the genocidal "Anfal" campaign, in which an estimated 180,000 people died. The sentence was upheld by an appeals court in September 2007. But senior Sunni figures, including Vice-President Tareq Al-Hashemi, insist that Sultan Hashem was a career soldier following orders of the political leadership. They argue that sparing him from death would foster national reconciliation, while hanging him would have the reverse effect, convincing Sunnis that this was sectarian revenge directed against Sunnis. Vice-President Al-Hashemi threatened to resign if the execution went ahead. Another aspect of the controversy centres on a dispute over powers within the Iraqi system. Al-Hashemi insists that the Presidency Council, of which he is a member together with President Jalal Talabani and Shi'ite Vice-President Adel Abd Al-Mehdi, has the final say in signing death sentence decrees as spelled out by the Constitution, while Prime Minister Al-Maliki says this does not apply to special tribunals. President Talabani, a former human rights lawyer, opposes the death sentence on principle and refuses to sign any death sentence. A Supreme Court ruling on the issue of judicial reviews is still being argued over. On 12 November, the US military, which has physical custody of the convicts, refused to hand over the three men to the Iraqi Government for hanging until, it said, authorities resolved their legal and procedural differences; Jim Muir, Political delay on Iraq death row, BBC, 14 November 2007, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7093759.stm. The Eligibility Guidelines addressed the state of government institutions in Iraq, highlighting that they were marred by weakness, ineffectiveness and sectarian divisions.⁹⁴ As of November 2007, government institutions remain weak, ineffective and sectarian.⁹⁵ Experts see an increasing risk of Iraq breaking into fiefdoms of various warring parties, turning Iraq into a “failed state”.⁹⁶ The central Government has little control over increasingly factionalized armed groups fighting for control in the country. It also suffers from a rising tide of corruption⁹⁷ and increasing criminality.⁹⁸ There is a widespread loss of popular confidence in state institutions and their ability to provide basic services.⁹⁹ According to the most recent US Government Accountability Office

(GAO) report, the ineffectiveness of the Shi'ite-dominated Government is a primary reason for the lack of progress in national reconciliation.¹⁰⁰ It assessed that “(m)inistries within the Iraqi government continued to be controlled by sectarian factions and are used to maintain power and provide patronage.”¹⁰¹

An indication of the Government's poor capacity has been its inability to fully spend available reconstruction funds. According to the GAO, a large portion of Iraq's USD10 billion budget allocated for capital projects and reconstruction will go unspent by the end of 2007.¹⁰² According to Oxfam, Iraqis are suffering from a growing lack of food, shelter, water and sanitation, health care, education, and employment. Fifteen percent of Iraqis are food-insecure and in dire need of humanitarian assistance; 70% are without adequate water supplies (compared to 50% in 2003); 80% lack effective sanitation; 28% of children are malnourished (compared to 19% before the 2003 invasion); and 92% of Iraqi children suffer learning problems, mostly due to the climate of fear.¹⁰³

A key political issue, as elaborated in the Eligibility Guidelines, the status of Kirkuk and other Arabized areas of Iraq, remains unresolved. Article 140 of the Constitution provides for the “normalization” of the situation in Kirkuk and other Arabized areas by 31 December 2007, calling for a three-step process including the return of the formerly displaced and restitution of their properties, the taking of a census and, finally, the holding of a referendum no later than 31 December 2007 to determine the status of these areas.¹⁰⁴ However, the status of these “disputed areas” remains unresolved and the implementation of Article 140 of the Constitution continues to hold potential for further conflict among sectarian groups, particularly in relation to the future of Kirkuk and control of the immense natural resources located in that region.¹⁰⁵ To date, no agreement has been reached on any aspect of the census or referendum, e.g. who will be permitted to vote, who will oversee the poll and which areas will be covered by the referendum. The referendum itself has now in fact been postponed until 2008. On 17 November 2007, the Council of Representatives (CoR) ordered an inquiry into the

to 6%. Also some 66% of those polled registered their disapproval of the way Prime Minister Al-Maliki was handling his job. Iraqis also expressed their dissatisfaction with the provision of public services such as electricity (58% said it was “very bad”), fuel for cooking or driving (59% said it was “very bad”) and clean water (40% said it was “very bad”) and another 43% said that they the availability of jobs was “very bad”; BBC/ABC News, Iraq Poll September 2007, 10 September 2007, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/shared/bsp/hi/pdfs/10_09_07_iraqpoll.pdf.

It mentioned that the Iraqi Government had so far met only one of eight legislative benchmarks aimed at promoting national reconciliation, i.e. protecting the rights of minority political parties in the Iraqi Constitution and legislation. It partially met another benchmark by enacting legislation on the formation of regions, but that law will not be implemented until April 2008; ibidem, pp. 6-7.

delay of the referendum.¹⁰⁶ The Kurdish Alliance has emphasized that the delay was for technical and not political reasons.¹⁰⁷

6. Hand-over of security in Southern Iraq and escalation in intra-Shi'ite fighting

After the fall of the former regime in 2003, the UK forces were assigned to run the four most Southern Governorates of Basrah, Muthanna, Missan and Thi-Qar (Multi-National Division South-East), while the other five Governorates came under Polish command (Multi-National Division Central South). Security has now been handed over to Provincial Iraqi Control (PIC) in the Governorates of Muthanna,¹⁰⁸ Thi-Qar,¹⁰⁹ Najef,¹¹⁰ Missan¹¹¹ and Kerbala.¹¹² On 3 September 2007, British troops completed a withdrawal from downtown Basrah, moving to Basrah Air Station outside the city. However, UK commanders have stated that they are prepared to return to Basrah City if necessary.¹¹³ With the expected handover of security in Basrah to the PIC, which is still planned for December 2007,¹¹⁴ the UK's role will shift from combat to a "security overwatch" role.¹¹⁵

Kerbala is only the eighth of Iraq's 18 Governorates to revert to Iraqi control, despite US President Bush's prediction in January 2007 that the Iraqi Government would have responsibility for security in all Governorates by November; The White House, President's Address to the Nation, 10 January 2007, <http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2007/01/20070110-7.html>. According to the USDoD, "the increase in violence in some parts of Iraq" is the reason for not transferring security responsibility to all Governorates as previously scheduled. It notes that "(T)he principal impediment causing the delay in transitioning security to Iraqi control is a lack of capability in the Iraqi Police Service (IPS), which prevents them from being able to manage the provincial security situation." It expects that all Governorates could transition to PIC "as early as July 2008;" USDoD, Measuring Stability and Security in Iraq September 2007, p. 27, see above footnote 29.

In the past, sectarian violence and Sunni insurgency activities have played a limited or no role in most Governorates, with the notable exception of Basrah, Babel and Wassit Governorates, which contain mixed Sunni-Shi'ite areas. In general, Southern Iraq has a more homogenous population of mostly Arab Shi'ite Muslims. While all of the Southern Governorates have seen anti-coalition operations by either Sunni and or Shi'ite armed groups, the drawdown of the foreign troops' presence has resulted in a significant reduction in attacks against the MNF-I.

The withdrawal of UK troops from Southern Iraq, however, has also resulted in a marked increase in sectarian and intra-sectarian violence in the region, especially with the relocation of the Mehdi Army to Southern Iraq due to the US troop surge in Central Iraq.¹¹⁶ Increasingly, the Southern Governorates have become the battlefield of rival Shi'ite militias over political power and religious legitimacy,¹¹⁷ oil resources, smuggling routes¹¹⁸ and territory. The two major actors are the Mehdi Army, loyal to radical Shi'ite cleric Muqtada Al-Sadr, and the Badr Organization, which is linked to the Supreme Islamic Iraqi Council (SIIC), the dominant party in the ruling coalition (UIA) of Prime Minister Al-Maliki.¹¹⁹ The latter is largely in control of the security forces in several Southern Governorates.¹²⁰ According to USDoD, the local security

Al-Sadr and Al-Hakim also disagree over Iraq becoming a federal state. Al-Hakim's call for the formation of a nine-province Shi'ite "super-region" with Basrah as its major centre, is rejected by Al-Sadr, who has his staunch base in Sadr City in Baghdad and vows for a strong central state; see for example, Aljazeera, Al-Sadr bloc rejects federalism, 14 October 2007, <http://english.aljazeera.net/NR/exeres/D30D2678-D3A8-47FE-ACAE-FC684E5D1FD8.htm>. forces are more interested in containing the influence of the Mehdi Army than in law enforcement.¹²¹

Violence has been rising in the South over the past several months. According to the latest quarterly Pentagon report on Iraq, security in the South took “a notable turn for the worse in August [2007]”. That month, two provincial governors were assassinated.¹²² Clashes have erupted in several cities between the Mehdi Army and Badr militia and police affiliated to the Badr Organization. The relocation of Mehdi Army fighters from Baghdad to Southern Iraq,¹²³ for example to Diwaniyah, has resulted in several fierce clashes between militias and the MNF-I/ISF.¹²⁴ There have also been allegations that Iran has intensified its training, arming and funding of Shi’ite militias.¹²⁵

The gradual reduction of British forces¹²⁶ and the lead-up to provincial elections scheduled to take place next year,¹²⁷ have led some analysts to express fear of an intra-sectarian civil war that could unseat the ruling Shi’ite coalition of Prime Minister Al-Maliki.¹²⁸ On 6 October 2007, Muqtada Al-Sadr and SIIC leader Abdul-Aziz Al-Hakim

pledged to cease violence for six months.¹²⁹ However, recent fighting among the militias in several Southern cities raises concerns over the agreement's sustainability.¹³⁰

Allegations have been made that AQI and other Sunni groups are taking advantage of the unstable situation in Southern Iraq and instigating further violence. Diwaniyah's security chief, Sheikh Hussein Hadi Al-Buderi, alleged that "there is a presence of al-Qaeda now in Diwaniyah," which he blames for the recent escalation in violence in the Governorate. Basrah's police chief blamed AQI for a suicide bombing which killed three policemen and injured 20 people in Basrah City on 25 September 2007, saying "(i)t seems that al-Qaida wants to make use of the fragile situation in the city caused by the tension among the parties and the city's officials".¹³¹

7. Civilian security

a) Civilian casualties

The rate of violent deaths in Iraq is a significant indicator of population security. As elaborated in the Eligibility Guidelines, following the bombing of the Samarra shrine in February 2006, sectarian violence escalated significantly with civilian death rates in Iraq at a high level.¹³² In recent months, a downward trend in attacks, sectarian killings and overall civilian casualties has been observed. Most available data sources show an overall increase in civilian casualties until some point near the end of 2006, with a general decline in 2007. The UN Secretary-General found that "(t)here has been a marked decline in civilian casualties,"¹³³ and "September [2007] witnessed the lowest number of Iraqi casualties for the year."¹³⁴

According to the US military commander in Iraq, General David H. Petraeus, testifying before Congress on 10 and 11 September 2007, the overall number of security incidents is on the decline and ethno-sectarian killings are "substantially" down as compared with the situation in December 2006. He further assessed that "(T)he number of overall civilian deaths has also declined during this period (...)".¹³⁵ The Petraeus report and subsequent releases of casualty statistics by the Iraqi Government and other sources¹³⁶ have, however, triggered a debate over the reliability and interpretation of such data,¹³⁷ including how civilian deaths are counted, the steepness of the decline in casualties,¹³⁸ and the conclusions to be drawn from this decline about the current security situation in the country.

Despite the reduction in civilian casualties, significant numbers of Iraqi civilians continue to be killed on a daily basis and, as noted by General Petraeus, “the numbers (...) are still at troubling levels.”¹³⁹ The UN Secretary-General also indicated in his October 2007 report that “both Sunni and Shiite armed groups have carried out systematic and widespread attacks against civilians through suicide bombings, abductions and extrajudicial executions, making no distinction between civilians and combatants. The violence has affected all of Iraq’s ethnic groups and communities, including minority groups. Scores of civilians were reportedly killed during military operations of the multinational force against insurgents or militias”¹⁴⁰

According to Anthony H. Cordesman, analyst with the private Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) in Washington, the decline in violent deaths has been a positive trend, but he cautioned against being overly optimistic, saying it was too early to know if it will last.¹⁴¹ The NIE of August 2007 assessed that “the level of overall violence, including attacks on and casualties among civilians, remains high.”¹⁴²

b) Displacement and returns

Both internal and external displacement continues to occur in Iraq due to serious human rights violations and sectarian and intra-sectarian violence. By the end of October 2007, approximately 1,128,440 persons had been displaced since the Samarra bombing in February 2006, including some 596,220 in Central Iraq and some 368,820 in Southern Iraq.¹⁴³ Increasingly, Governorates are closing their borders to internally displaced persons (IDPs) citing security concerns and lack of absorption capacity.¹⁴⁴

Although uncertainty about the number of returnees to Central Iraq exists, there have been reports that many IDPs and refugees have returned to their former place or area of residence, primarily to Baghdad.¹⁴⁵ The absence of accurate baseline data and the lack of monitoring, information and reporting about the routes of return and areas of return make it extremely difficult to establish the extent to which current movements have been safe, dignified or voluntary.¹⁴⁶

¹⁴¹ Steven R. Hurst, Iraqi deaths fall by 50 percent, AP, 3 October 2007, http://www.iraqupdates.com/p_articles.php/article/22469. Also, the USDoD assessed in its latest report to Congress that “(I)t is too early to determine the sustainability of these trends;” USDoD, Measuring Stability and Security in Iraq September 2007, p. 20, see above footnote 29.

¹⁴² NIE August 2007, p. 1, see footnote 47.

¹⁴³ While the increase has not been as significant as in previous months, more than 75,000 persons were newly displaced between August and September 2007. See: Cluster F Update on IDPs, 19 September 2007, <http://www.unhcr.org/clusterFreports/Cluster F Update on IDPs September 19 f.pdf>; Cluster F Update on IDPs, 21 November 2007, <http://www.unhcr.org/clusterFreports/Cluster F Update on IDPs 2007 November 21.pdf>. Figures have been provided by the Ministry of Displacement and Migration (MoDM) and Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG).

¹⁴⁴ Basrah Governorate recently shut its borders for IDPs. Hassan Abdul-Kareem, a senior official in Basrah’s Governing Council, said the Governorate “cannot cope with any more families seeking refuge in our province, whatever their reasons. The governorate is seriously affected by the high number of displaced families.” According to the local council and MoDM, more than 40 IDP families have been arriving on a daily basis in Basrah. Reportedly, dozens of families were turned away by Basrah security forces; IRIN, IRAQ: Basra closes doors to displaced, 12 November 2007, <http://www.irinnews.org/Report.aspx?ReportId=75255>.

¹⁴⁵ Prime Minister Al-Maliki credited the improved security situation for the returns, saying that 7,000 families had returned to Baghdad; Cara Buckley, Iraq Premier Sees Families Returning to Safer Capital, The New York Times, 12 November 2007, <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/12/world/middleeast/12iraq.html>. See also: IRIN, Thousands return home as violence drops, government says, 4 November 2007, <http://www.irinnews.org/report.aspx?ReportId=75141>.

¹⁴⁶ According to the MoDM of the Government of Iraq, some 3,460 IDP families have returned to Baghdad between February and November 2007, mostly between March and June, and a further 6,000 families are awaiting registration. Concerning refugees, the MoDM believes that approximately 30,000 families have returned from Syria.

Despite notable improvements in the security situation in the past few months, the ongoing conflict in many parts of the country and the fluctuating levels of violence raise questions about the safety of the current returns and their sustainability. The Iraqi government and the UN are stepping up efforts to address the immediate needs of these returnee families, given the prevailing situation in Iraq.

UNHCR is currently examining the trends, motives and sustainability of these recent returns. There are indications that persons do not necessarily return to their places of origin but rather to areas where their sectarian group is in control. Interviews with some returnees have shown that only a small minority have returned because of an improvement in the security situation.¹⁴⁷ Returnees from neighbouring countries have claimed that they were returning because they depleted their savings and/or were unable to renew their visas.¹⁴⁸ Others appear to be returning due to the lack of services in the area of displacement and/or because they wish to take advantage of the financial reintegration assistance provided by the Government to returnees in Baghdad (approximately USD800).

Despite the afore-mentioned returns, some sources have claimed that, in fact, the numbers are dropping as of November.¹⁴⁹ Caution has been urged by several actors, including UNAMI, the Iraqi Government and the US military.¹⁵⁰ It should also be noted that the Iraqi Government has urged refugees in some countries not to go back to their homes yet, saying the country was unprepared to accommodate their return.¹⁵¹ The US military has warned that the Iraqi Government has yet to develop a plan to absorb the returnees and prevent their return from setting off a new round of sectarian violence as many returnees find their houses occupied by members of the opposite sect.¹⁵²

Given the reasons provided for returning to Iraq and the conditions prevailing in the country, the returns are not indicative of developments that would warrant, at this stage, a change in UNHCR's position concerning Iraqi asylum-seekers and, therefore, UNHCR is of the opinion that the situation is not conducive to return.

¹⁴⁷ UNHCR, Iraq: UNHCR cautious about returns, UNHCR Briefing Notes, 23 November 2007, <http://www.unhcr.org/news/NEWS/4746da102.html>.

¹⁴⁸ Reportedly, over 46,000 Iraqis returned in October 2007, mainly from Syria. While some seem to be returning due to improved security, others return due to stricter visa regulations imposed on Iraqis in Syria since October and difficulties to make ends meet; IRIN, IRAQ: Refugees forced home as funds dry up, 12 November 2007, <http://www.irinnews.org/report.aspx?ReportID=75257>. III. Security situation in Central Iraq

1. Baghdad Governorate

The Baghdad Security Plan,¹⁵³ the Mehdi Army's temporarily laying down of arms¹⁵⁴ and advanced stages of sectarian segregation¹⁵⁵ have resulted in decreasing levels of violence in Baghdad. Some signs of normalcy have returned to parts of the city with more shops open and people in the streets and markets.¹⁵⁶ Despite these positive trends, however, Baghdad remains the most violent area in Iraq.¹⁵⁷ Sectarian killings continue to be prevalent in mixed areas, mostly in Baghdad's western districts, with several bodies found shot dead on a regular basis, often with signs of torture.¹⁵⁸ Given that non-state actors remain operational and given that they demonstrated their ability to fill security vacuums left after the relocation of US troops, the potential for renewed sectarian violence remains.¹⁵⁹

Though Baghdad has not seen any mass casualty incidents in recent months and the overall number of attacks has decreased, the MNF-I/ISF and the civilian population remain targets of daily roadside bombings, car bombs, suicide attacks, small arms fire and mortar attacks. MNF-I military offensives and raid and search operations continue to result in civilian casualties¹⁶⁰ and private security companies have been accused of using excessive force, and of wounding or killing civilians.¹⁶¹

Rubin, Baghdad's Weary Start to Exhale as Security Improves, The New York Times, 20 November 2007, <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/20/world/middleeast/20surge.html>; The New York Times, Around Baghdad, Signs of Normal Life Creep Back, 19 November 2007, http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2007/11/19/world/middleeast/20071120_BUILDDUP_OVERVIEW.html; Leila Fadel, Embattled Baghdad shows signs of hope, McClatchy Newspapers, 14 November 2007, <http://www.mcclatchydc.com/iraq/story/21475.html>.

¹⁵⁷ See Section II.7: Civilian security / Civilian casualties.

¹⁵⁸ Please see Annex I – List of sectarian killings in Baghdad, for a list of incidents as reported by the media between 1 October and 30 November 2007.

¹⁵⁹ See above Section II.4: Sectarian segregation.

¹⁶⁰ For example, a US raid accompanied by air strikes on mostly Shi'ite Sadr City on 21 October 2007 reportedly killed as many as 49 persons, including civilians, and drew quick condemnation by Iraqi officials, including Prime Minister Al-Maliki. US military officials said that US troops came repeatedly under attack in Sadr City and that only insurgents were killed; Stephen R. Hurst, US: Raid of Baghdad's Sadr City Kills 49, AP, 22 October 2007, <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/10/21/AR2007102100664.html>. In addition, on 31 June 2007, two raids were conducted in Sadr City, resulting in the death of 26 "terrorists"

Government officials and employees, politicians, members of religious minorities,¹⁶² journalists and media workers and other professionals continue to be targets for

according to the US military. An Interior Ministry official, Lt-Col Mahmoud Shakarchi, said all the dead were innocent civilians, including women and children; IRIN, IRAQ: Baghdad suburb residents flee after US raids, 3 July 2007, <http://www.irinnews.org/Report.aspx?ReportId=73049>. On 27 November 2007, four personnel of the Iraqi Finance Ministry were killed and two others wounded when US forces opened fire at their bus in northeastern Baghdad; VOI, 6 finance ministry personnel killed, wounded by U.S. fire in Baghdad, 27 November 2007, http://www.iraqupdates.com/p_articles.php/article/24400. ¹⁶¹ For example, on 11 November 2007, a guard from the US private security firm DynCorp International, which is in charge to protect US embassy personnel and affiliated contractors, reportedly shot and killed an Iraqi taxi driver in Baghdad’s Uttafiyah neighbourhood; James Glanz, Security Guard Fires From Convoy, Killing Iraqi Driver, The New York Times, 12 November 2007, <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/11/12/world/middleeast/12contractor.html>. Private US security firm Blackwater has been accused of killing Iraqi civilians in an incident on 16 September 2007 in Baghdad’s Mansour neighbourhood. While Blackwater claimed that there had been an attack on a convoy carrying US diplomats it was escorting, an Iraqi Government investigation produced no evidence of such an attack. It accused Blackwater of having committed “deliberate murder” by killing up to 17 civilians. The US also launched an investigation. Preliminary findings of an investigation conducted by the FBI indicate that the Blackwater employees violated deadly force rules in effect for security contractors in Iraq, saying that at least 14 of the shootings were unjustified. On 25 September 2007, the UN Working Group on the Use of Mercenaries expressed concern over the incident and denounced the immunity of private security companies. The Iraqi Government cancelled Blackwater’s licence and ordered all personnel to leave Iraq immediately; see David Johnston and John M. Broder, *F.B.I. On 30 October 2007, the Iraqi Government approved a draft law revoking the immunity from prosecution private security contractors enjoy under Iraqi Law (CPA Order No. 17). The law must now be approved by the CoR; BBC, Iraq to end contractor immunity, 30 October 2007, http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle_east/7069173.stm. Other incidents in which civilians were killed or wounded by private security contractors have been listed by UNAMI HRO; see: UNAMI/HRO, Human Rights Report October 2007, p. 10, see above footnote 160. On the legal status of private security companies, see also UNHCR, Country of Origin Information Iraq, October 2005, pp. 45-46, available in UNHCR’s Refworld at <http://www.unhcr.org/cgi-bin/texis/vtx/refworld/rwmain?docid=435637914>. Iraq says there are more than 180 security firms operating in the country, mostly from the US and Europe. The number of private security guards is estimated at between 25,000 and 48,000; Mariam Karouny, Iraq arrests foreign guards over shooting, Reuters, 19 November 2007, <http://www.alertnet.org/thenews/newsdesk/KAR979273.htm>.

¹⁶² Christians in Baghdad, and in particular in the neighbourhood of Doura, have been under intense pressure in 2007, resulting in the flight of most of them. Reportedly, militant Sunni Islamic groups issued religious edicts (fatwa) and distributed threatening letters, calling upon Christians to convert to Islam within 24 hours, pay an Islamic tax (jizya), leave or face death. Reportedly, whole Baghdad neighborhoods have been cleared out of Christians. Christians are reportedly also under pressure by Shi’ite militias, for example it has been reported that Christians in Baghdad were called upon to wear the veil. In a hearing convened by the US Commission on International Religious Freedom in July 2007, Canon Andrew White, vicar of St. George’s Anglican Church in Baghdad, said that in the past three to four months, things had deteriorated considerably for religious minorities in Iraq. According to his testimony, “hundreds of Christians who could not afford to flee the country were living in churches without adequate food or water.” He also mentioned that there were only eight Jews left in Baghdad, which were yet unable to leave the country; USDoS, International Religious Freedom Report 2007 - Iraq, 14 September 2007, <http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2007/90211.htm> (further: “USDoS, International Religious Freedom Report 2007 – Iraq”); UNAMI/HRO, Human Rights Report October 2007, pp. 8, 12-

kidnapping and assassination.¹⁶³ Reports of extra-judicial killings and the use of torture by the ISF continue to emerge.¹⁶⁴

2. Al-Anbar Governorate

Al-Anbar Governorate used to be one of the most violent Governorates in the country and the stronghold of AQI. MNF-I/ISF security operations,¹⁶⁵ as well as changed tribal alliances, have led to a significant reduction in violence in the region, with many AQI fighters fleeing Al-Anbar's urban areas.

The Governorate's major towns, Ramadi and Fallujah, however, remain under extraordinary security measures with neighborhoods segregated by concrete walls, numerous checkpoints and residents required to hold special biometric identification badges.¹⁶⁶ There are concerns, though, that the ISF is too weak to establish full control and implement law and order.¹⁶⁷

¹⁶⁴ UNAMI HRO in its last report said that it continued to receive reports of the alleged involvement of ISF in extra-judicial killings in several incidents in Baghdad; UNAMI/HRO, Human Rights Report September 2007, pp. 8-9, see above footnote 160. It also stated that “continuing reports of the torture and illtreatment of detainees held in particular at pre-trial detention facilities under the authority of the Ministry of Interior in Baghdad” remain a major concern; ibidem, p. 4.

¹⁶⁵ As part of the “the surge”, an additional 4,000 US troops were deployed to Al-Anbar Governorate. Between 16 June and 14 August 2007, the MNF-I/ISF aimed at securing the areas of Fallujah (“Operation Alljah”), Karma and Tharthar; Bill Roggio, Operation Phantom Thunder: The Battle of Iraq, The Long War Journal, 21 June 2007, http://www.longwarjournal.org/archives/2007/06/operation_phantom_fu.php.

Despite security improvements, the Governorate sees regular clashes involving the MNF-I/ISF, tribal and insurgent groups as well as AQI and its affiliates, resulting at times in civilian casualties.¹⁶⁸ In addition, AQI continues to launch attacks against the MNF-I/ISF, tribal leaders and Government officials as well as civilians.¹⁶⁹ In November 2007, several mass graves were found in the Lake Tharthar area.¹⁷⁰ There have also been allegations of arbitrary arrests and use of torture by the ISF and tribal and insurgent groups against persons alleged to have links to AQI.¹⁷¹

3. Diyala and Salah Al-Din Governorates

After the formation of tribal alliances in Al-Anbar Governorate and the launch of the Baghdad Security Plan, the Governorate of Diyala became the stronghold of AQI and the most violent area in the country outside Baghdad. There were frequent attacks on the MNF-I/ISF and the civilian population, resulting in high civilian death tolls and widespread displacement.¹⁷²

Between 18 June and 19 August 2007, some 10,000 US and Iraqi troops launched a large-scale operation dubbed “Arrowhead Ripper” to oust AQI militants from the Governorate’s capital Baqubah and its surrounding areas. Insurgent groups such as the 1920 Revolution Brigades, the Mujaheddin Army and the Islamic Army worked ¹⁶⁷ Reportedly, the police in Al-Anbar lack equipment, fuel, weapons and vehicles. The New York Times reported in August 2007 that many Sunni leaders accused the Shiite-dominated central Government of neglecting the area for sectarian reasons, fearing that Sunni security forces might eventually turn against it after a US withdrawal; Richard A. Opiel, Falluja’s Calm Is Seen as Fragile if U.S. Leaves, The New York Times, 19 August 2007, <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/08/19/world/middleeast/19falluja.html>.

¹⁶⁸ For example, the US military acknowledged that it killed 15 civilians, including nine children, and wounded others in an operation targeting AQI in the area of Lake Tharthar on 11 October 2007. The UN urged the US to mount a vigorous investigation into the incident and to make the findings public; Suzanne Goldenberg, Ewen MacAskill and agencies, UN calls for US to publish facts on Iraqi deaths, The Guardian, 12 October 2007, <http://www.guardian.co.uk/Iraq/Story/0,,2189560,00.html>. alongside the MNF-I/ISF against AQI.¹⁷³ As a result, the city was largely secured, but AQI continues to have a presence in other parts of the Governorate. According to Lt. Gen. Raymond T. Odierno, the second-ranking US commander in Iraq, 80% of AQI leaders in Baqubah fled before the launch of the offensive.¹⁷⁴ There are concerns over the role of tribal and insurgent groups in this mixed Governorate, which also has sizable Shi'ite and Kurdish populations.¹⁷⁵

In Salah-Al-Din, levels of violence have decreased to some extent. However, AQI still has a strong presence in pockets of the Governorate, in particular in the areas around Samarra, Tarmiyah, Dhuluiya and Baiji.¹⁷⁶ In a major incident on 7 July 2007, a suicide bomber attacked the busy central market of Amirli, a Turkmen village near the town of Tuz Khurmatu, killing more than 130 persons and wounding 240 others.¹⁷⁷

Therefore, despite relative improvements in security in parts of Diyala and Salah Al-Din Governorates due to intense security operations by MNF-I/ISF and tribal and insurgent groups, the situation remains fragile and unstable.¹⁷⁸ The Governorates are the scene of regular clashes between the MNF-I/ISF and tribal and rival insurgent factions, who are fighting AQI and its allies.¹⁷⁹ There are daily attacks on the MNF-I/ISF and those supporting them, including government officials, politicians, tribal members, contractors and translators. There are also regular attacks on civilians. Sectarian killings continue to occur in mixed areas, with bodies found tortured, shot and dumped. The BBC reported that the Islamic Army of Iraq is apparently planning to use those captured in an exchange of prisoners. Fifteen fighters from the Islamic Army were also killed in the attack. Apparently, the MNF-I/ISF were not involved in the clashes; Joshua Partlow, Rival Sunnis in Deadly Gunfight, The Washington Post, 11 November 2007, http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2007/11/10/AR2007111000382.html?nav=rss_world. ¹⁸⁰ On 18 November 2007, IRIN reported about the dire lack of doctors in the Governorate of Diyala. According to Diyala's Health Department, at least 80% of the doctors in the Governorate fled due to violence. Police officer Lt. Col. Abdallah Mustafa Aydan said that between August and November 2007 there was an increase in the numbers of doctors attacked by militants and insurgents, resulting in the Party/security services, continue to be targeted.¹⁸¹ MNF-I/ISF security operations against AQI have at times resulted in civilian casualties,¹⁸² as well as casualties among its tribal and insurgent supporters.¹⁸³

4. Kirkuk and Ninewa Governorates

Both Kirkuk and Ninewa Governorates include the so-called “disputed areas”, the status of which are to be determined in line with Article 140 of the Iraqi Constitution.¹⁸⁴ Various groups are vying for control over the disputed territory, in particular oil-rich Kirkuk. Extremists continue to stir sectarian violence among Arabs, Kurds and, in areas such as Kirkuk and Tal Afar, Turkmen.¹⁸⁵ Under pressure from the MNF-I/ISF and tribal alliances in Baghdad, Al-Anbar, and parts of Babel, Diyala and Salah Al-Din Governorates, AQI has regrouped in areas of Kirkuk and Ninewa Governorates. Violence in these areas has been increasing.¹⁸⁶ On 5 November 2007, the MNF-I/ISF launched a major security operation (“Operation Iron Hammer”) in the Governorates of Ninewa, Kirkuk, Salah Al-Din and Diyala to counter Al-Qa’eda there.¹⁸⁷

As a detailed report of the International Crisis Group explained, Kirkuk increasingly resembles Baghdad:

*“with Arabs, Kurds, Turkomans and Chaldo-Assyrians hunkered down in neighbourhoods which, while not entirely segregated, are distinctly hostile to members of whatever community happens to be the minority.”*¹⁸⁸

Some observers note that tensions among ethnic groups over the unresolved status of Kirkuk could turn into another civil war,¹⁸⁹ possibly spreading into the Kurdistan Region.¹⁹⁰

The Governorate of Ninewa has also seen increasing levels of violence in 2007. Local authorities have reported, in September 2007, that on average 40 civilians or police had been killed in violent incidents every week since June 2007.¹⁹¹ The violence is mostly between Sunni insurgents and local ISF or Shi’ite militants. Kurds and other minorities, such as Yazidis and Christians, are also attacked by insurgents.¹⁹²

In both Governorates, there are car bombings, suicide attacks and shootings. There are also targeted kidnappings and assassinations,¹⁹³ including of government officials, politicians, religious and tribal figures, members of minority groups,¹⁹⁴ journalists, other professionals, persons affiliated with the MNF-I/ISF, humanitarian workers, and members of the former regime.¹⁹⁵ PUK and KDP offices are also a regular target for attacks.¹⁹⁶ Dead bodies are found on a regular basis, often shot and with signs of

IV. Security situation in Southern Iraq

1. Basrah Governorate

Basrah Governorate, which used to have a population that included Arab Shi'ites and Sunnis, Christians and Sabaeen-Mandaeans, has lost much of its mixed character due to ongoing violence and the displacement of most minorities.¹⁹⁹ The Sunni presence has shrunk from 40% to just less than 14% since 2003.²⁰⁰ Reportedly, several hundred members of the Sunni community, including its most prominent cleric in Southern Iraq, Imam Yusuf Yaqub Al-Hassan, have been murdered, and hundreds of families evicted from their homes.²⁰¹ There have also been several attacks on Basrah's Sunni mosques, most recently in June 2007.²⁰² In addition, most Christians and Sabaeen-Mandaeans have been forced to flee the Governorate.²⁰³

Basrah, Iraq's second-largest city and where most of the country's immense oil wealth²⁰⁴ and its only ports are located,²⁰⁵ is at the centre of the factional fighting. In addition to the Mehdi Army²⁰⁶ and SIIC / Badr Organization,²⁰⁷ the Islamic Fadhila Party²⁰⁸ and Thar Allah²⁰⁹ are also major actors.²¹⁰ Militias have infiltrated the local ²⁰⁴ Nearly 80% of Iraq's 115 billion barrels of proven reserves, the third largest in the world, are located in or near Basrah. With the northern pipelines being a frequent target of insurgents, most of the 1.6 million barrels of oil per day exported in 2006 went through the port in Basrah, making up 93% of Iraq's budget; Ben Lando, Analysis: Oil flows in Basra power vacuum, UPI, 16 August 2007, http://www.upi.com/International_Security/Energy/Analysis/2007/08/16/analysis_oil_flows_in_basra_power_vacuum/5416/. ²⁰⁵ Most of Iraq's imports and exports go through Basrah's Umm Qasr port.

²⁰⁶ Al-Sadr has several loyalists in the Basrah Governorate Council.

²⁰⁷ The SIIC and its affiliates hold 21 of the 40 seats in the Basrah Governorate Council.

²⁰⁸ Fadhila's spiritual leader is Najef-based cleric Ayatollah Muhammad Al-Yacoubi, who broke ranks with Muqtada Al-Sadr in 2003. Fadhila holds only 12 seats in the Basrah Governorate Council, however with the support of other parties, was able to hold the post of the Governor and one of the two Deputy Governors. Fadhila dominates the 15,000-strong Oil Protection Force. Basrah's Governor, Mohammed Al-Wa'eli has been accused of mismanagement of public funds, corruption and using the Oil Protection Force as a paramilitary specialized in crude oil theft. On 30 April 2007 a vote of no-confidence was brought against the Governor by Basrah's Governing Council and, as a result, Prime Minister Al-Maliki dismissed the Governor on 28 July 2007. Fadhila appealed the dismissal to Iraq's Supreme Court and by the time of writing, Al-Wa'eli remains in power; UN SC, Report October 2007, para 14, see above footnote 13. security forces²¹¹ and control hospitals, the university, ports, oil facilities and power supply.²¹² These militias provide social services and impose law through extra-judicial courts.²¹³ Basrah's Deputy Governor, Loai Al-Batat, said in late October 2007 that the local security forces were unable to fully control the city.²¹⁴

Despite some initial success gained during security operation "Sinbad" between September 2006 and March 2007,²¹⁵ intra-Shi'ite fighting has again escalated with daily street battles, kidnappings and assassinations.²¹⁶ According to a Basrah-based newspaper editor, at least 300 members of Badr and SIIC have been assassinated in Basrah alone since the start of the year.²¹⁷ According to the ICG, "the city is controlled

Initially, the operation succeeded in lowering crime, political assassinations and sectarian killings, but as of April 2007, levels of violence have again increased. For a critical analysis, see ICG, Basra report June 2007, p. 16, see above footnote 118. See also Karen DeYoung and Thomas E. ²¹⁶ According to the NIE of August 2007, "Intra-Shia conflict involving factions competing for power and resources probably will intensify as Iraqis assume control of provincial security. In Basrah, violence has escalated with the drawdown of Coalition forces there. Local militias show few signs of reducing their competition for control of valuable oil resources and territory;" see NIE August 2007, p. 2, see above footnote 47. by militias, seemingly more powerful and unconstrained than before.”²¹⁸ The ICG considers the port city of Basrah to be an example of Iraq’s “multiple and multiplying forms of violence”, plagued by:

*“the systematic misuse of official institutions, political assassinations, tribal vendettas, neighborhood vigilantism and enforcement of social mores, together with the rise of criminal mafias that increasingly intermingle with political actors.”*²¹⁹

In addition to intra-Shi’ite fighting, the Governorate suffers from frequent kidnappings and assassinations by armed militias, militia-infiltrated ISF and criminals, of security officials, government officials, political, tribal and religious figures, persons affiliated with the MNF-I,²²⁰ former Ba’athists,²²¹ members of religious minorities,²²² journalists,²²³ human rights activists and humanitarian workers, and other professionals.²²⁴ According to Basrah’s police chief, Major-General Abdul-Jalil Khalaf, women in Basrah are threatened, beaten and sometimes shot, if they are believed not to adhere to strictly-interpreted Islamic rules.²²⁵ The same applies to men whose clothes or

Militia attacks on and fighting with the MNF-I/ISF are also common²³⁰ and Basrah has been the site of bomb, mortar and suicide attacks.²³¹ Criminality is also a major concern in the city.²³² Basrah’s police chief Major-General Abdul-Jalil Khalaf vowed that he “was ready to deal with armed militias,” saying that:

Given the infiltration of the security forces by militia members,²³⁴ dealing with the armed militias will remain a major challenge. The local population is largely confined to homes, fearing violent battles and imposition of strict Islamic rules by militias.²³⁵ Many see no other option but to seek protection from one of the dominant actors.²³⁶

2. Diwaniyah, Missan, Wassit, Muthanna and Thi-Qar Governorates

These Governorates have seen several episodes of pitched battles between the Mehdi Army and Badr / Badr-affiliated ISF,²³⁷ and the assassination of SIIC members.²³⁸ In August 2007, the governors of Muthanna and Diwaniyah Governorates, both SIIC/Badr members, were killed in roadside bombings, allegedly by Mehdi Army members. Al-Sadr denies any Mehdi Army involvement.²³⁹

The MNF-I regularly clash with Mehdi Army members and, recently, a group calling itself Kataib Al-Hussein, or Hussein battalions.²⁴⁰ US, Polish²⁴¹ and Iraqi troops have

The so-called mid-Euphrates provinces, Kerbala and Najef, which are home to Shi'ite Islam's holiest sites and leading centres of Islamic theology,²⁵¹ have seen regular security incidents since 2003, including (suicide) attacks against mostly Shi'ite civilians, MNF-I and ISF and those working for them.²⁵² There have been targeted assassinations, including of religious²⁵³ and political figures, Government officials, other professionals and former Ba'athists,²⁵⁴ and armed clashes among rival Shi'ite militias and security forces. A major clash, which reportedly involved gunmen loyal to Al-Sadr and Badr-dominated security forces,²⁵⁵ occurred on 28 August 2007 during a religious festival in Kerbala. More than 50 persons were killed and 300 more wounded when gunfire, mortar shells and grenades exploded amid the worshipers.²⁵⁶ Militia also attacked numerous SIIC offices in the south-central area and in Baghdad over the following days.²⁵⁷ Despite a pledged truce between SIIC and Al-Sadr, renewed clashes

4. Babel Governorate

The Governorate of Babel has a mixed Sunni-Shi'ite population and has seen extensive sectarian killings and insurgent activities in 2005, 2006 and 2007, in particular in the so-called "Triangle of Death" south of Baghdad, which contains the towns of Yusufiyah, Mahmoudiyah, Iskandariyah, Musayyib and Latifiyah.²⁶⁰ Reportedly, AQI and other Sunni insurgent groups have established bases of operations in this area to attack Baghdad and launch attacks on the Shi'ite areas further south.²⁶¹

Over the past year, the Governorate has been the scene of some of the most devastating bombings since 2003, including a twin suicide bombing in a local market in Hilla on 1 February 2007, killing at least 60 and wounding 150,²⁶² and the killing of at least 90 Shi'ite pilgrims in a double suicide bombing in the capital Hilla on 6 March 2007.²⁶³

Between June and August 2007, the MNF-I/ISF launched two major military offensives in the Governorate of Babel directed against AQI and other extremists.²⁶⁴ More recently, local residents and tribes have taken the initiative to fight AQI along with the

V. Conclusion

There have been improvements in the security situation in parts of Central Iraq from February to November 2007. These include, most notably, a decrease in killings and overall civilian casualties. The level of human rights violations and violence along sectarian and intra-sectarian lines, however, remains high in Central and Southern Iraq, and the ISF continue to face serious challenges in maintaining law and order. In addition, many of the hoped-for political advances have not yet occurred. The overall situation remains volatile and unpredictable.

Both internal and external displacement continues to occur, due to serious human rights violations and sectarian and intra-sectarian violence. Displaced persons find it increasingly difficult to move both within Iraq as well as to neighbouring countries given more restrictive entry policies implemented at Governorate and state borders. On the other hand, a major development in the period since the Eligibility Guidelines were issued is that there have been returns of displaced Iraqis, both within the country and from outside. Several key aspects of these movements, however, remain unknown or unclear. The number of returns appears to be relatively modest. Clear trends regarding the returns cannot be established, nor can the motives behind them or their sustainability. From the testimonies provided by returnees interviewed by UNHCR concerning their reasons for returning and the objective situation in Iraq, UNHCR could not conclude that the returns signal a situation which would warrant, at this stage, a change in its position concerning Iraqi asylum-seekers.

The updated information contained in the Addendum does not show that in the period between February and November 2007, even the most positive security and political improvements have yet translated into political reconciliation, the building of strong and non-sectarian state institutions, the re-establishment of law and order, reconstruction and the adequate provision of services. UNHCR is thus maintaining the position, set out in the Eligibility Guidelines originally, with regard to assessing the international protection needs of Iraqi asylum-seekers. In brief, that position is as follows:

With regard to Iraqi asylum-seekers from Central and Southern Iraq:

- UNHCR considers Iraqi asylum-seekers from Central and Southern Iraq to be in need of international protection.
- Iraqi asylum-seekers from Central and Southern Iraq should be considered as refugees based on the 1951 Convention criteria.
- Where such asylum-seekers are not recognized under the 1951 Convention refugee criteria, international protection should be afforded through the application of an extended refugee definition, or otherwise through a complementary form of protection.
- UNHCR considers that an internal flight or relocation alternative (IFA/IRA) in Central and Southern Iraq is on the whole not available. When, however, the availability of an internal flight or relocation alternative must be assessed in a national procedure, it should be examined cautiously, taking into account the particular circumstances of the applicant. The question of the availability of an

IFA/IRA in the three Northern Governorates for individuals from Central and Southern Iraq must be carefully assessed on a case-by-case basis, taking into consideration, in particular, the relevance and reasonableness analysis in the Eligibility Guidelines.

As concerns Iraqi asylum-seekers from the three Northern Governorates:

- The international protection needs of asylum-seekers from the three Northern Governorates should be individually assessed based on the 1951 Convention refugee definition. In cases where an asylum-seeker is not recognized as a refugee under the 1951 Convention but nevertheless demonstrates protection needs for which complementary forms of protection may be appropriate, the case should be assessed accordingly.
- UNHCR considers that there is no IFA/IRA available for asylum-seekers from the three Northern Governorates in Central and Southern Iraq. Whether an IFA/IRA may be available for them within the three Northern Governorates themselves must be examined carefully on a case-by-case basis. Special attention should be paid to the categories of individuals highlighted in the Eligibility Guidelines who clearly would not be able to find an IFA/IRA in the three Northern Governorates.

In all cases, due attention should be paid to possible grounds for exclusion, in accordance with Article 1(F) of the 1951 Convention.

The following annexes provide overviews of violent incidents as reported in the media. The individual incidents have not been verified by UNHCR and are not to be considered comprehensive. These annexes serve to illustrate the prevalence of certain types of violence and the targeting of members of specific groups as identified in the Eligibility Guidelines.

Annex I – List of sectarian killings in Baghdad

The following lists incidents as reported by the media between 1 October and 30 November 2007. Unlike previous months, when dozens of bodies were found on a daily basis in Baghdad, several bodies are still found every day.
