P R E F A C E

It has been a common phenomenon in every state, that international traffic of people has grown remarkably due to economic development and advancement in transport facilities.

This rapid growth of technology, however, has not always its good result.

The increase of Indonesian nationals going abroad and foreign nationals entering our country has given rise to both domestic and transnational crime problems.

Due to the facts that criminality nowadays tends to have a transnational character, it is impossible for a country to consider itself a closed unit and combats criminality in isolation of its neighbours.

International cooperation and mutual legal assistance has become increasingly important as crimes become more transnational.

For this purpose it would be advisable for countries to have knowledge of each others legal system whether by exchange of information as well as by studying foreign penal codes and other regulations relating to crime prevention.

Since foreign language often creates a special linguistic barrier, translation of those codes into a language which is used in international relations will be of much help.

It is in this connection, that the Department of Justice has published the English version of the Penal Code of Indonesia.

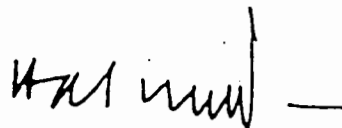

The Penal Code of Indonesia is based on the code regulated in state Gazette no. 732 year 1915 known as the "Wetboek van Strafrecht voor Indonesia" with all its revisions and amendments up to 1976.

In closing this preface, I would like to extend my gratitude and appreciation to Mr. Sugondo Sumodiredjo, S.H., the former Director General of Law and Legislation who has devoted his time and attention to this translation.

And last, but not least, my sincere thanks to those who willingly helped in the publication of this book.
