Ministerial Conference on Refugee Protection and International Migration:
The Almaty Process

5 June 2013

Summary Report

Introduction

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) co-organized the Ministerial Conference on Refugee Protection and International Migration: The Almaty Process on 5 June 2013, in Almaty, Kazakhstan. The Conference was funded by the Government of the Republic of Kazakhstan. The Conference brought together Ministers and high ranking officials from the Central Asian and neighboring States, as well as other stakeholders.

The Ministerial Conference built on the first Almaty Conference on Refugee Protection and International Migration held in March 2011, which resulted in the unanimous adoption of the Almaty Declaration. The Almaty Declaration acknowledged the continued need to address the multiple challenges resulting from complex migration dynamics and mixed migratory movements in Central Asia and the wider region, in a cooperative and coordinated manner.

Since 2011, the Central Asian States of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, the Republic of Tajikistan and Turkmenistan have made significant strides toward translating the recommendations of the Almaty Declaration into action. This included a series of national consultations within each of the four States and the formal designation of National Coordinators, resulting in the endorsement of the Regional Cooperation Framework and Regional Action Plan at the National Coordinators' Meeting on 7 September 2012. This laid the foundation for the establishment of a regional platform for dialogue and cooperation on refugee protection and international migration. The National Coordinators of the four Central Asian States and representatives of other participating States also recommended the organization of a second Ministerial Conference to formally establish the Almaty Process as a platform for dialogue and cooperation on migration and refugee issues at the regional level among Central Asian and States with which Central Asian States share common migration concerns.

A further series of consultations with Ambassadors and senior officials of the participating States took place, with the final coordination meetings held on 6 February, 22 April, 6 May, 20 May, 29 May, and a Senior Officials Meeting held on 4 June 2013. These consultations offered the opportunity for States sharing migration concerns with Central Asian States to contribute on an equal basis to the preparations for the establishment of the Almaty Process, including the development of its Operating Modalities and the drafting of the Ministerial Communiqué. The Operating Modalities set out the objectives of the Almaty Process, outline the membership, the terms of reference of the chairmanship and of the Support Unit, the participation of observers and the frequency of meetings. The Communiqué reaffirms the commitment of States to address the multiple challenges resulting from complex migration dynamics and mixed migratory movements in Central Asia and the wider region through regional dialogue, practical cooperation, the establishment of appropriate national legal frameworks to ensure the human rights of migrants, access to international protection for those in need, and durable solutions for refugees. It also formally adopts the Operating Modalities.

Proceedings

In his opening speech, his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Kazakhstan, Erlan A. Idrissov noted that migration is a pressing global issue, adding that Kazakhstan is both a transit and destination country. The Government of Kazakhstan is committed to addressing the complexity of international migration through a national, a regional and an international approach and to be a leader in ensuring refugee protection and effective migration management. He further noted that migration issues need to be resolved through regional cooperation and dialogue and thanked participating States for agreeing to work on resolving regional migration challenges collectively. The Minister also highlighted the interest of the Republic of Kazakhstan in launching the Almaty Process, to coordinate with other regional consultative fora, and to make use of Almaty's geo-political importance in order to address real-time issues of the region.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Mr. António Guterres noted the increasing complexity of forced displacement, adding that Central Asia has always been a cultural and economic crossroads and that the population movements the region has witnessed will only grow in scale and complexity. He acknowledged the right of States to define their own immigration and national security policies, provided they do so in respect for human rights and in ways that ensure international protection for those who need it. He explained that UNHCR's attention in Central Asia is focused on preserving and strengthening the asylum space available to refugees, efforts to reduce and prevent statelessness, ensuring appropriate emergency preparedness and response, and on helping States manage the mixed migratory flows. He highlighted that the Almaty Process addresses several of the humanitarian challenges facing this region and that a successful response can only come from a regional and collective response. The High Commissioner thanked participating States for their increased engagement in this process which could bring about concrete solutions.

The Deputy Director General of the International Organization for Migration, Ms. Laura Thompson, pointed out that migration continues to grow with the number of international migrants expected to reach 400 million people by 2040. This makes the need to ensure that migration is humanely and responsibly managed ever more pressing. She noted that the search for gainful employment is a key factor driving migration and highlighted the important contribution of labour migration to economic growth and development, while also emphasizing the need for strong and effective mechanisms for its management in order to minimize security risks for states and individuals, including vulnerability of migrant workers. The IOM Deputy Director General also pointed out that significant irregular migration flows and the associated risks for individuals, are a serious concern in the region. She also referred to the multi-ethnic set up, competition and tensions over scarce resources, political instability in the wider region as well as environmental degradation and recurrent natural disasters as other key factors that will likely continue to trigger internal and cross-border movements, including forced migration within the region. Environmental degradation and recurrent natural disasters are additional factors impacting mobility. Ms. Thompson further stated that throughout its 60 plus year history, IOM, acting with partners, has helped governments to design and implement creative solutions to migration challenges. As such, she suggested four key programme areas that need to be part of this solution in this region within the framework of the “Almaty Process”,: a) Combatting irregular migration and all the challenges stemming from it; b) expanding channels for regular migration, creation of decent employment opportunities and strengthening links between migration and development; c) fight against smuggling and trafficking in human beings; d) migration-related aspects of natural disasters or man-made crises in the region which might occur from key events and processes in the region, such as the withdrawal of the international military forces from Afghanistan and the potential impact of natural disasters. She placed emphasis on ensuring the protection of human rights of all migrants in all these activities and the need to pay particular attention to the diverse vulnerable groups, including trafficked persons, unaccompanied minors, refugees, asylum seekers, stateless persons or returning migrants to ensure that their needs are properly identified and that they are provided with appropriate support and protection.

Ms. Zumrad Solieva (Republic of Tajikistan) reported on the conclusions of the Senior Official’s Meeting on 4 June 2013 regarding the Operating Modalities and the draft Communiqué. The Rapporteur emphasized that the Almaty Process will strengthen international cooperation on development and implementation of projects on migration management ensuring respect for human rights and international protection.

Jamaher Anwary (Islamic Republic of Afghanistan), Mr. Nazim Salmanov (Republic of Azerbaijan), Mr. Nurlan Dosaliev (Kyrgyz Republic), H.E. Ömer Burhan Tüzel (Republic of Turkey), Mr. Eziz Abdrasulov (Turkmenistan), Mr. Saidkhon Jurakhonov (Republic of Tajikistan).
