Budgets and Expenditure for Egypt

Working environment

Egypt is a destination and transit country for refugees and asylum-seekers from more than 60 countries. Egypt grants access to public education to refugees and asylum-seekers of certain nationalities, and to national health care services for Syrians. At the end of 2016, access to national health care services was extended to all nationalities. The lack of some specialized health services and the limited capacity of public schools to absorb refugee children remained of concern.

The general protection environment remained stable, though challenges remained: residence permits are of short duration and there are lengthy procedures to obtain and renew them; funding available for Syrian refugees were greater than that for refugees of other nationalities; and there was an increase in the number of people detained for arriving or departing Egypt irregularly.

Economic policies increased the cost of living and impacted refugee access to livelihood opportunities.

Population trends

- Some 193,000 refugees and asylum-seekers were registered, including 116,000 Syrians. The remaining 77,000 refugees and asylum-seekers are from 65 other nationalities, mostly Eritrean, Ethiopian, Iraqi, Somali, Sudanese and South Sudanese.
- UNHCR newly registered 45,500 people of concern (17,400 Syrians and 28,100 other nationalities). This represents a 70 per cent increase compared to 2015.

Achievements and impact

- Access to public health services was extended to refugees and asylum-seekers of all nationalities at the end of 2016.
- UNHCR continued its efforts to reduce the waiting period for refugee status determination.

Unmet needs

- Cash assistance to help refugees meet their basic needs was only provided to 42 per cent of vulnerable Syrian refugees and 15 per cent of vulnerable African and Iraqi refugees.
- The waiting period for refugee status determination was significantly decreased in the last two years, but remained at 20 months due to an increased number of new registrations and limited staffing.
- Education grants only reached 45 per cent of school-aged children (5 to 17 years) and covered only 30 per cent of private school fees for children who did not have access to public schools.
