Twelfth session
Geneva, 3–14 October 2011

Compilation prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1

Togo

The present report is a compilation of the information contained in the reports of treaty bodies, special procedures, including observations and comments by the State concerned, and other relevant official United Nations documents. It does not contain any opinions, views or suggestions on the part of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), other than those contained in public reports issued by OHCHR. It follows the structure of the general guidelines adopted by the Human Rights Council. Information included herein has been systematically referenced in endnotes. The report has been prepared taking into consideration the four-year periodicity of the first cycle of the review. In the absence of recent information, the latest available reports and documents have been taken into consideration, unless they are outdated. Since this report only compiles information contained in official United Nations documents, lack of information or focus on specific issues may be due to non-ratification of a treaty and/or to a low level of interaction or cooperation with international human rights mechanisms.

1. The Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) encouraged Togo to consider ratifying ICRMW.⁶
2. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo recommended that Togo should accede to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.⁷
3. In 2011, UNESCO recommended that Togo ratify the 1960 UNESCO Convention against Discrimination in Education.⁸

B. Constitutional and legislative framework

4. In 2011, the HR Committee noted with concern that the legislative reforms guaranteeing equal rights for men and women, in particular the adoption of a new Criminal Code and Personal and Family Code, had still not been completed, and that the bills in question still failed to repeal all provisions discriminatory against women, such as those relating to polygamy. Togo should speed up its legislative reforms, to make acts of violence against women such as domestic violence and marital rape offences under the Criminal Code,⁹ and to amend any provision of the Personal and Family Code that perpetuates inequality between men and women, such as the stipulation that the man is the “head of the family”.¹⁰

5. UNICEF pointed out that the harmonization of national legislation with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other international child protection standards through the adoption of the Children’s Code was an important step forward in implementing the rights of the child in Togo.¹¹ CRC recommended that Togo revise the Children’s Code through a participatory process in order to ensure full compliance with the Convention; and to undertake a comprehensive review of other existing legislation in order to identify areas where legal reform is required.¹²

C. Institutional and human rights infrastructure

6. In 1999, the National Commission for Human Rights (CNDH) was accredited with A status by the International Coordinating Committee of National Human Rights Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (ICC), as reconfirmed in 2000 and 2007.¹³

7. HR Committee observed that CNDH’s limited budget did not permit it to carry out its mandate fully. It was concerned about the lack of follow-up to recommendations made by the Commission and encouraged Togo to allocate additional funds to the Commission so that it can fulfil its mandate effectively and bring cases before the courts if necessary.¹⁴

8. CAT recommended that Togo adopt appropriate measures to guarantee the independence and impartiality of the CNDH, and to ensure its ability to deal with complaints and investigate violations of the Convention.¹⁵

9. CAT welcomed the establishment in 2005 of a general inspectorate of security services entrusted with monitoring the conditions and length of detention.¹⁶

10. The United Nations system in Togo recommended that the Ombudsman should take up his or her post within a reasonable period in accordance with the Constitution.¹⁷

11. In 2011, UNICEF indicated that the national committee on the rights of the child (CNE) provided for under article 453 of the Children’s Code had not yet been established.¹⁸

D. Policy measures

12. OHCHR reported that a national human rights plan and programme of action had been adopted in May 2007 and that a human rights-based approach was integrated into the 2008–2012 United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF).¹⁹

13. In 2011, UNICEF pointed out that the national policy paper on child protection and 2009–2013 five-year national strategic plan confirmed in December 2008 by all child protection stakeholders had not yet been adopted by the Government.²⁰

II. Promotion and protection of human rights on the ground

14. In 2008, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) welcomed the opportunity to resume dialogue with Togo after a long interruption and invited it to submit its future reports in a regular manner.²²

15. OHCHR, through its country office in Togo, has been extending assistance to the Government for the submission of overdue reports, including reports to CERD (2008), HR Committee (2009), CESCR (2009), CRC (2010) and CAT (2011).²³

3. Cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

16. Cooperation is facilitated through the OHCHR country office in Togo, which was established in 2006 with the aim of strengthening national capacities relating to the human rights promotion and protection, including with regard to implementing the 22 commitments on democracy and human rights made with the European Union in April

2004, the recommendations of OHCHR's fact-finding mission of 2005, and the recommendations of United Nations treaty bodies and other human rights mechanisms.²⁵

B. Implementation of international human rights obligations, taking into account applicable international humanitarian law

1. Equality and non-discrimination

17. CEDAW urged the introduction of measures to modify or eliminate customs and practices that discriminate against women, in particular forced and early marriages, discriminatory widowhood practices, as well as levirate, bondage and female genital mutilation. It invited Togo to increase its efforts to implement awareness-raising programmes, in collaboration with civil society organizations, women's non-governmental organizations and community leaders.²⁶

18. CEDAW urged Togo to take appropriate measures to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women with respect to the ownership and inheritance of land. It invited Togo to place emphasis on women's human rights in all development cooperation programmes.²⁷

19. CEDAW expressed concern that the number of women in decision-making positions in political and public life remained low, including in the Parliament, the civil service and the judiciary.²⁸ In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo noted that the proportion of parliamentary seats held by women was 11 per cent. A preliminary bill aimed at introducing a 30 per cent quota for women's representation in decision-making posts was pending adoption.²⁹

20. CEDAW noted with appreciation the adoption of special measures in the fields of education and employment, such as the lowering of school fees for girls and the establishment of entry quotas for women in sectors traditionally reserved for men, including the police and the army.³⁰

21. CEDAW remained concerned that the law relating to nationality precludes a foreign woman spouse from retaining Togolese nationality upon divorce.³¹ CRC was concerned that children born out of wedlock or children with foreign fathers may, in some instances, be denied Togolese citizenship.³²

22. CERD encouraged Togo to include in its legislation a definition of racial discrimination in line with the Convention³³ and recommended that the Government's activities, including the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner for Reconciliation and Strengthening National Unity, take into account the principle of non-discrimination.³⁴

23. CERD noted with concern an ethnic imbalance in the civil service and in the army, where the Kabyè-Tem-Losso group was predominant. Other ethnic groups were underrepresented in the Government, the Assembly, the magistracy and public institutions. It encouraged Togo to continue its efforts to implement the recommendations of the 2005 fact-finding mission by taking urgent and adequate measures to radically transform recruitment in the army and civil service so as to reflect the cultural and ethnic diversity of Togolese society.³⁵

24. The HR Committee and CERD were concerned about the failure of Togo to impose penalties on political leaders and journalists who had incited ethnic hatred and tribalism during the 2005 elections, with resulting massacres and population displacements.³⁶ CERD was concerned that tensions between various ethnic groups could persist and hinder the reconciliation process. It invited Togo to step up its efforts to promote harmonious relations between the various ethnic and cultural groups.³⁷

25. CRC noted with concern that societal discrimination persisted against vulnerable groups of children, in particular girls and children with disabilities. It expressed concern about continuing discrimination against girls with respect to access to education, employment and inheritance. It urged Togo to undertake an in-depth review of its legislation, including the Individuals and Family Code and the Nationality Code of 1998, in order to fully guarantee the application of the principle of non-discrimination, and to adopt a comprehensive strategy to eliminate discrimination on any grounds and against all vulnerable groups.³⁸ In 2011, UNICEF pointed out that despite the signing in 2008 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, children with disabilities in Togo continued to face considerable exclusion at both the family and community level.³⁹ CRC was concerned that only very few children with disabilities have access to education and employment services.⁴⁰

2. Right to life, liberty and security of the person

26. In 2011, HR Committee expressed satisfaction that Togo had adopted legislation abolishing the death penalty (2009).⁴¹

27. The HR Committee remained concerned at the allegations of torture and ill-treatment in detention facilities, particularly those of the National Intelligence Agency (ANR), and by deaths alleged to have resulted from abuse in prison. Togo should take steps to investigate all allegations of torture and ill treatment and all deaths in detention in order to bring the perpetrators to justice and provide effective compensation to victims.⁴² The UNCT made similar observations.⁴³

28. CAT was concerned by allegations, in particular following the April 2005 elections, of the widespread practice of torture, enforced disappearances, arbitrary arrests and secret detentions, as well as the frequent rape of women by military personnel, and the apparent impunity enjoyed by the perpetrators of such acts. Togo should ensure that military personnel are under no circumstances involved in the arrest and detention of civilians. Togo should take urgent steps to bring all detention facilities under judicial control, and to prevent arbitrary detentions and torture. Togo should carry out prompt, impartial and exhaustive investigations, try the perpetrators of torture and ill-treatment and, if found guilty, impose sentences commensurate with the gravity of the offences.⁴⁴

29. The Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, while noting the overall commitment of the Government to combat torture, found evidence of torture and ill-treatment in most police commissariats and gendarmerie posts that he visited in 2007, as well as allegations and evidence of beatings by prison guards as a means of punishment. The Special Rapporteur noted that this situation was caused by almost total impunity and the lack of an explicit prohibition of torture or an independent monitoring system, in addition to deficiencies in the criminal justice system, involvement of the military in law enforcement, corruption and the lack of resources.⁴⁵

30. CAT and the HR Committee recommended that Togo include in its Criminal Code a definition of torture on the basis of international standards and legislation.⁴⁶

31. HR Committee was concerned about the large number of persons arbitrarily detained and the lack of an immediate remedy to challenge the legality of detention. It was also concerned about the lack of training for judges, who apparently consent to the use of detention for debt. Togo should put an end to all arbitrary detention, including of persons detained for debt.⁴⁷ In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo disclosed that the Debt Collection Board continued to use enforcement by committal to recover civil debt under Decree 2001-11/PR (2001).⁴⁸

32. CAT noted the worrying detention conditions, in particular in Lomé and Kara prisons. The most widespread problems were overcrowding, a shortage of food and poor hygiene. The treatment of prisoners, including corporal punishment, remained a matter of concern. Often women and children were not held separately from men and adults, and persons awaiting trial were not separated from those serving sentence. Togo should comply with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.⁴⁹ The HR Committee was similarly concerned at prison overcrowding, which was partly attributable to the persistent phenomenon of arbitrary detention.⁵⁰

33. In 2011, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances noted that there were 10 outstanding cases of disappearances and that no response had been received from the Government in relation thereto.⁵¹

34. CRC was deeply concerned about reports of killing, in certain areas, of children born with disabilities, malformations, skin discoloration (albinos), as well as of children born with teeth, or from mothers who died during delivery. It urged Togo to prevent the occurrence of such killings, to prosecute those responsible and to raise awareness among the population of the need to eradicate such practices.⁵²

35. CEDAW urged Togo to accord priority to addressing violence against women and girls and enacting legislation on domestic violence, including marital rape, and on sexual abuse and harassment. Such legislation should ensure that victims have access to immediate means of redress and protection and that perpetrators are prosecuted and punished.⁵³

36. HR Committee and CAT noted with regret that female genital mutilation (FGM) continued to be widely practised.⁵⁴ According to the United Nations system in Togo, a 2008 study on female genital mutilation showed that 6.9 per cent of women and girls in the country were still affected by the practice.⁵⁵ CRC recommended that Togo work with traditional and religious leaders to ensure that harmful traditional practices are effectively banned; and raise awareness of the harmful impact of FGM and other harmful traditional practices on the girl child.⁵⁶

37. While noting the adoption in 2005 of legislation relating to trafficking in children, CAT was concerned by information that the problem persists, in particular in the north and centre of the country.⁵⁷ UNICEF pointed out that trafficking in children was reaching alarming proportions⁵⁸ because of the lack of a national social protection system capable of addressing children's poverty and vulnerability in a holistic manner. UNODC indicated that in 2007, six men had been convicted of trafficking in persons, but had received a sentence of less than 1 year in prison.⁵⁹ In 2011, the ILO Committee of Experts requested Togo to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age were carried out and that sufficiently dissuasive penalties were imposed.⁶⁰ CRC recommended that Togo ensure effective programmes for child protection, repatriation and recovery; strengthen law enforcement, intensify efforts to raise awareness, and prosecute the perpetrators.⁶¹

38. CRC was concerned at the large number of child victims of violence, abuse and neglect, including sexual abuse, in schools, detention centres, public places and the family.⁶² In 2011, UNICEF reported that the number of child victims of violence, abuse and sexual exploitation was growing at an alarming rate.⁶³

39. In 2010, the ILO Committee of Experts requested Togo to take urgent measures to bring an end to the exploitation experienced by certain children in domestic service and apprenticeship, which were similar to forced labour within the meaning of the ILO Forced Labour Convention (No. 29).⁶⁴ In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo noted that although the minimum age for employment was set at 15 years of age under the Children's Code, 29 per cent of children aged 5 to 14 were employed in work considered dangerous for their development.⁶⁵ CRC recommended that Togo focus on addressing the root causes of child labour through poverty eradication and access to quality education, and by developing a comprehensive child labour monitoring system in collaboration with NGOs, community-based organizations, law enforcement personnel, labour inspectors and the ILO Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour (ILO-IPEC).⁶⁶

40. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo pointed out that the Children's Code prohibited corporal punishment and violence against children at home and in school. However, in practice, schools often remained a place where students were exposed to violence.⁶⁷ CRC recommended that Togo adopt a law effectively prohibiting all forms of corporal punishment of children, undertake public-awareness campaigns on the negative impact of corporal punishment on children, and provide teachers and parents with training on non-violent forms of discipline as an alternative to corporal punishment.⁶⁸

41. CRC was concerned at the large number of children living and working on the streets, the vulnerability of these children to various forms of violence, including sexual abuse and economic exploitation, the lack of a systematic and comprehensive strategy to address the situation and protect these children, and the poor registration and tracing of missing children by the police.⁶⁹

3. Administration of justice, including impunity, and the rule of law

42. In 2008, OHCHR reported that national consultations had preceded the adoption of a Presidential Decree creating the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission (TJRC).⁷⁰

43. In 2011, HR Committee noted with regret that the serious human rights violations committed during and after the presidential elections of 2005 had yet to be investigated, that the perpetrators had not been prosecuted and that compensation had not been granted to the victims. Togo should continue its efforts to bring the work of the TJRC to an early conclusion. However, the establishment of a transitional system of justice could not serve to dispense with the criminal prosecution of serious human rights violations.⁷¹ The United Nations system in Togo recommended that the Government should step up the transitional justice process and implementation of the recommendations that emerged from the work of the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission.⁷²

44. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo pointed out that the national programme to modernize the justice system, set up between 2005 and 2010, had introduced a reform of procedural law that had produced 23 bills and regulations on the organization of the judiciary, the status of judges and other judicial officers and the harmonization of criminal law with the international agreements ratified by Togo. This draft legislation, confirmed in a technical workshop in November 2008, was still pending submission to the parliament.⁷³

45. CAT noted with concern that the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to police custody did not provide for the notification of rights or the presence of a lawyer, that the 48-hour time limit for police custody was rarely observed in practice, and that some people were held without charge or were awaiting trial for several years.⁷⁴

46. The United Nations system in Togo pointed out that the executive branch's interference in the running of the judiciary remained a major concern even if it seemed to have diminished since 2006.⁷⁵ CAT recommended effective steps to guarantee the independence of the judiciary.⁷⁶

47. The United Nations system in Togo noted that, in practice, legal proceedings were rarely instituted against some perpetrators of wrongful acts, in particular defence and security forces. They sometimes seemed to enjoy near immunity from legal proceedings.⁷⁷

48. HR Committee was concerned that the principle of presumption of innocence was flouted by judges and that the practice of pretrial detention had become the norm. It was also concerned about detainees' lack of access to counsel and delays in the adoption of legislation on legal aid. Public defenders were only assigned in the final stages of criminal proceedings.⁷⁸ In 2009, the Togolese Bar Association, with OHCHR support, launched a project aimed at helping the poorest with access to justice by providing them with free legal counselling.⁷⁹

49. HR Committee recommended that Togo provide further training for judges, lawyers and court officers concerning the content of the Covenant to ensure that it is enforced by judicial authorities.⁸⁰ In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo pointed out that the shortage of judges contributed to the slow pace of legal proceedings.⁸¹

50. CAT recommended that Togo adopt effective legislative, administrative and judicial measures to ensure that all allegations of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment are swiftly followed up by inquiries and prosecution. Suspects should be suspended from their duties when appropriate.⁸² CAT was concerned by the absence in the Code of Criminal Procedure of provisions requiring the invalidation of statements obtained under torture.⁸³ CAT recommended measures to ensure that all persons who report cases of torture or ill-treatment are protected against any resulting act of intimidation.⁸⁴

51. CAT recommended that Togo set up an effective mechanism for dealing with complaints of sexual violence, including within the prison system, and provide victims with protection and assistance. Togo should ensure that women prisoners are guarded by female prison warders only.⁸⁵ It should also consider establishing a national system to monitor detention facilities.⁸⁶

52. CRC was concerned about the absence of a juvenile justice system compatible with the Convention, and in particular about the very limited number of qualified judges for juveniles; the lack of alternatives to detention for persons under 18 in conflict with the law; and the fact that persons under 18 are often detained with adults and in very poor conditions and for long periods.⁸⁷ In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo pointed out that the 2007 Children's Code now stressed restorative justice measures over imprisonment. The establishment of an adequate number of juvenile rehabilitation facilities, the appointment of juvenile judges in every court and the introduction of specialized social services for the psychological care of children had yet to be accomplished.⁸⁸

53. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo considered that the main shortcoming of the judicial system remained the complete absence of administrative litigation proceedings.⁸⁹

4. Right to privacy, marriage and family life

54. The HR Committee remained concerned about the criminalization of sexual relations between consenting adults of the same sex, punishable by one to three years of imprisonment and a fine under article 88 of the current Criminal Code. Togo should bring its legislation into line with the Covenant through decriminalization, and take steps to put an end to the social stigmatization of homosexuality.⁹⁰

55. CRC recommended that Togo take all necessary measures to protect adopted children, including by establishing a system to monitor and supervise effectively the system of adoption.⁹¹

5. Freedom of religion or belief, expression, association and peaceful assembly, and right to participate in public and political life

56. In 2007, OHCHR reported that, for the first time in almost 20 years, the legislative elections held in October 2007 had included participation by the opposition party, and that observers had declared the election fair and free.⁹²

57. The HR Committee noted with concern unjustified restrictions on freedom of expression, in particular the censorship of certain media by the High Audio-visual and Communications Authority (HAAC), whose independence and operating procedures had been called into question. It was similarly concerned about restrictions on the freedom to demonstrate peacefully, and about threats against certain journalists and human rights defenders. Togo should take steps to ensure that the new Act ensuring the freedom to demonstrate will be in conformity with the Covenant. Togo should also review the statutes and operating procedures of the High Audio-visual and Communications Authority in order to guarantee its independence and impartiality.⁹³

58. In 2011, UNESCO recommended that Togo introduce provisions in the existing legislation to guarantee freedom of expression, media freedom and the right to access information and to guarantee the independence of its media self-regulatory body.⁹⁴

59. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders, following a visit to Togo from 28 July to 4 August 2008, noted that human rights defenders continued to face challenges impeding their legitimate activities, including stigmatization by the authorities who see them as belonging to the political opposition, unjustified delays in delivering registration certificates to NGOs, illegitimate restrictions on the exercise of freedoms of assembly, opinion and expression, and impunity for past abuses against human rights defenders.⁹⁵

60. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo noted that defamation suits had been brought by the national police authorities against three press organizations for publishing similar information in their pages. Other proceedings were under way.⁹⁶

61. The United Nations system in Togo pointed out that difficulties were sometimes encountered in the exercise of the right to demonstrate as no legal provision apart from the Constitution specified the extent of that right. A bill on the conditions for the exercise of freedom of assembly and the right to demonstrate in the streets and public places was under consideration.⁹⁷

6. Right to work and to just and favourable conditions of work

62. CEDAW expressed concern at the discrimination faced by women in the field of work, as reflected in hiring processes, salary inequality and occupational segregation. It urged Togo to ensure equal opportunities for, and equal treatment of, women and men in the labour market, as well as the full implementation of the Labour Code, including with regard to maternity protection.⁹⁸

7. Right to social security and to an adequate standard of living

63. In 2005, CRC was concerned at the sharp decrease in public expenditure on education and health, and at the lack of funds available for children living in poverty.⁹⁹

64. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo pointed out that 61.7 per cent of Togolese were living below the poverty line, versus 30 per cent in 1990.¹⁰⁰ CEDAW was concerned that widespread poverty among women contributed to the violation of women's human rights. It was especially concerned about the situation of rural women, in view of their precarious living conditions and lack of access to justice, health care, education, credit facilities and community services. It urged Togo to make the promotion of gender equality an explicit component of its national development plans and policies.¹⁰¹

65. CEDAW urged Togo to continue its efforts to improve the country's health infrastructure and improve women's access to health care and health-related services and information, including in rural areas.¹⁰² CRC recommended that Togo strengthen its efforts to raise awareness of HIV/AIDS among adolescents.¹⁰³

66. CRC was also concerned at the increasing infant mortality rate, the high child and maternal mortality rates, low birth weight, child malnutrition, the low breastfeeding rate, the low rate of immunization, the prevalence of infectious diseases, mosquito-borne diseases, including malaria, and the lack of access to safe drinking water and sanitation. It was further concerned about the disparity between the number of health centres in rural and urban areas.¹⁰⁴

8. Right to education and to participate in the cultural life of the community

67. In 2011, the United Nations system in Togo pointed out that efforts still had to be made for instance to ensure quality in education, reduce overcrowded classes in public schools and improve the quality of teaching.¹⁰⁵

68. CRC recommended that Togo ensure, as a matter of priority, that at least primary education is compulsory and free; that girls and boys, from urban and rural areas, all have equal access to educational opportunities, without any financial obstacles; and that teachers are adequately trained and paid. Togo should also take measures to prevent and punish the abuse of school pupils by teachers, including sexual harassment and economic exploitation, and introduce human rights into the school curricula.¹⁰⁶

69. CEDAW recommended that Togo implement measures to ensure equal access of girls and women to all levels of education, retain girls in school and abolish circular No. 8478/MEN-RS which prohibits pregnant girls or students from attending school.¹⁰⁷

70. In 2011, UNICEF pointed out that only 51 per cent of newborn infants had been registered at birth. That situation put the children at a considerable disadvantage as those who did not have a birth certificate were not authorized to sit national end-of-year examinations in primary education.¹⁰⁸

9. Migrants, refugees and asylum-seekers

71. CAT recommended that Togo take steps, as a matter of urgency, to ensure the peaceful return of Togolese refugees from neighbouring countries, and to guarantee full respect for their physical and mental integrity.¹⁰⁹

72. CAT recommended that Togo adopt measures to prohibit the expulsion, return or extradition of a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that he or she would be in danger of being subjected to torture.¹¹⁰

III. Achievements, best practices, challenges and constraints

73. CRC noted that Togo was among the group of least developed countries and that a large part of the population lived below the poverty line.¹¹¹ CRC was concerned at reports of widespread corruption, which had a negative impact on the level of resources available for the implementation of the Convention.¹¹²

74. CERD welcomed the process of reconciliation which had resulted in the signing of the Global Political Accord on 20 August 2006, and the peaceful conduct of the legislative elections in October 2007.¹¹³

75. In 2011, UNICEF pointed out that the establishment of the “ALLO 111” helpline had helped to remove the taboo surrounding violations of the rights of the child in general and serious violence, abuse and exploitation in particular.¹¹⁴

IV. Key national priorities, initiatives and commitments

Specific recommendations for follow-up

76. In 2011, the HR Committee requested Togo to provide, within a year, the information requested on implementation of the Committee's recommendations contained in paragraphs 10 (presidential elections April 2005), 15 (criminalization of torture) and 16 (torture in detention).¹¹⁵

77. In 2008, CERD requested Togo to provide information, by 15 August 2009, on its follow-up to the recommendations in paragraphs 13 (incitement to hatred), 17 (property and indigenous peoples) and 18 (ethnic representation in public office).¹¹⁶ A response was received in 2009.

78. In 2006, CAT requested that Togo provide, within a year, information on its response to the Committee's recommendations in paragraphs 21 (visits to detention facilities), 25 (human rights defenders), 29 (situation of a woman allegedly detained since 1998) and 30 (system of military justice).¹¹⁷ No response has been received to date.

V. Capacity-building and technical assistance

79. CRC recommended that Togo seek further assistance concerning children with disabilities from UNICEF and the World Health Organization (WHO);¹¹⁸ concerning HIV/AIDS from, UNICEF, WHO and UNAIDS¹¹⁹ and concerning juvenile justice from OHCHR and UNICEF.¹²⁰

80. CRC recommended that Togo continue and strengthen its cooperation with UNICEF and the Division for the Advancement of Women in order to counter the practice of FGM.¹²¹

81. CRC recommended that Togo strengthen cooperation with UNESCO, UNICEF and other partners in improving the education sector.¹²²
