Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-fourth session from 18 to 29 January 2016. The review of Denmark was held at the 7th meeting on 21 January 2016. The delegation of Denmark was headed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Kristian Jensen. At its 14th meeting, held on 26 January 2016, the Working Group adopted the report on Denmark.

2. On 12 January 2016, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Denmark: Belgium, Côte d'Ivoire and Panama.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Denmark:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/24/DNK/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/24/DNK/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/24/DNK/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Denmark through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The head of the delegation said that the Government looked forward to receiving the recommendations from the current review, and thanked all national stakeholders engaged in the national consultation process leading up to the review, not least the Danish Institute for Human Rights. The high number of refugees and immigrants coming to Europe in 2015 was unprecedented. Within the European Union, Denmark had accepted a large number of asylum seekers relative to its population size, and relative to geographical size, it was one of the countries in the world providing the most humanitarian assistance to Syrian refugees. Danish policies were in full accordance with the country's international obligations.

6. Denmark had received 133 recommendations during the first universal periodic review. Of them, a total of 102 had been accepted, while 5 had been partially accepted. The head of delegation highlighted some of the actions that the recommendations from the first review had generated.

7. Responding to some of the written questions, he stated that unaccompanied asylum-seeking minors were appointed a personal representative who supported and cared for them with regard to personal issues and attended asylum interviews and other meetings with the authorities. Accommodation for all unaccompanied minors was provided at a special children's centre run by the Danish Red Cross.

8. The number of juvenile delinquents being incarcerated with adults was small; in 2015, an average of 1.3 inmates aged under 18 had been placed in a prison with adults. In some cases, separating inmates aged under 18 from adults would mean placing them in a prison far from their home, or in solitary confinement. There had been only one case of court-ordered solitary confinement of a minor since 2011.

9. The delegate of the Faroe Islands said that new residential facilities had been established in the Faroes for people with special needs, who had traditionally been offered housing and care outside the Faroes. Measures had been taken to address the low participation of women in public committees and politics and over the past three elections, the share of women in the Faroes Parliament had gone from under 10 per cent to over 30 per cent. A proposal to allow same-sex marriage had been submitted to the Faroes Parliament and legislation regarding sexual offences and protection of victims of stalking would be presented in Parliament in autumn 2016.

10. The delegate of Greenland said that the Human Rights Council of Greenland had been established and that the mandate of the Danish Institute for Human Rights had been extended to Greenland. A children's council and a children's spokesperson had been appointed as part of the Children's Rights Institution in order to increase awareness of children's rights and living conditions. A strategy and action plan against violence had been adopted, particularly targeting domestic violence. Combating violence and improving conditions for children would be a major priority in the forthcoming years. A consultancy unit had been established to assist social services to improve their performance in cases involving children.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

11. During the interactive dialogue, 86 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

12. Bulgaria commended Denmark for its ratification of several instruments since the first review, the establishment of the Office for Children and the Greenland Human Rights Council. It appreciated the efforts to combat domestic violence, discrimination and trafficking, which were reflected in several national action plans.

13. Burkina Faso noted that Denmark had made significant progress in improving the normative and institutional framework on the rights of the child, vulnerable persons, persons with disabilities, refugees and migrants, and on nationality rights. It urged Denmark to continue focusing on protecting human rights, especially those of migrants and refugees, and to strengthen human rights cooperation between the two countries.

14. Iceland applauded efforts to place human rights at the forefront of the national agenda and urged the Government to live up to the high human rights and humanitarian standards of Denmark and refrain from taking any measures that would undermine its international obligations towards refugees.

15. Chile recognized the institutional and legal framework for protecting and promoting human rights, through ratification of international instruments and the standing invitation to the special procedures, and highlighted the action plans relating to gender equality and the implementation of Security Council resolution 1235 (2000).

16. China noted the efforts to promote and protect the rights of children, persons with disabilities, refugees and migrants and to advance gender equality. It also noted the National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2015-2018).

17. Colombia welcomed the extensive information that Denmark had provided for the review and its achievements in the protection and promotion of the rights of children and in guaranteeing the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons.
18. Costa Rica welcomed the role of Denmark as an advocate of the International Criminal Court and hoped that it would continue those efforts. Costa Rica also welcomed the creation of the expert committee on the incorporation of human rights instruments into Danish law and other policy measures, but was concerned about cases of discrimination against members of minorities.
19. Côte d'Ivoire commended Denmark for its cooperation with international human rights institutions, its accession to legal instruments, its adoption of the third National Action Plan for implementation of Security Council resolution 1235 (2000) and the entry into force in 2012 of new rules on family reunification for the benefit of children.
20. Djibouti welcomed the adoption of the third National Action Plan for implementation of Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) and the integration of a greater number of children with disabilities in mainstream education. It expressed concerns about discrimination against minorities, including Muslims.
21. Ecuador appreciated the efforts Denmark had made since the first review, including its adoption of legislation to combat domestic violence and to facilitate voting for persons with disabilities. Ecuador was deeply concerned about legislation requiring refugees to relinquish their valuables.
22. Egypt welcomed developments since the first review, including enhanced human rights education. It was concerned about the adoption of restrictive policies on migration and asylum seekers, including the new law on confiscating valuables, and increasing reports of hate crimes and racist discourse.
23. Spain welcomed the adoption of the third National Action Plan for implementation of Security Council resolution 1235 (2000). It appreciated the efforts Denmark had made to investigate hate crimes and to integrate children with disabilities in mainstream education.
24. Finland appreciated the involvement of civil society in the universal periodic review process and encouraged Denmark to adopt a legislative framework to protect women from psychological violence. It noted the concerns of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women about the adverse impact of the existing legislation on citizenship on stateless women and girls.
25. Georgia appreciated the new laws adopted and the action taken since the first review, including the strengthening of the advocacy role of the National Council for Children and the establishment of the Office for Children. It encouraged the practice of submitting midterm implementation reports.
26. Germany commended Denmark for its commitment to upholding human rights and increased efforts to place human rights at the forefront of its national agenda.
27. Ghana noted the establishment of the Office for Children as part of the Danish Parliamentary Ombudsman Institution and the reform of the Disability Pension since the first review. It applauded Denmark for having implemented a significant number of the recommendations from that review.
28. Greece highlighted progress made in the protection of children, especially vulnerable children, efforts to reduce bullying in schools and progress achieved on the rights of persons with disabilities. It welcomed the results of efforts to promote the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons and to increase gender equality and women's participation in the labour market.

29. Guatemala noted that Denmark had made undeniable progress, particularly its establishment of an expert committee to examine the incorporation of international human rights instruments into law, but was concerned that the Supreme Court had stated that treaties that were not incorporated into domestic law did not have a direct effect on the domestic legal order.

30. Honduras thanked the delegation of Denmark for its report and made recommendations.

31. Hungary noted that restrictions in the mandate and powers of the Office for Children had resulted in the majority of complaints being refused. It encouraged Denmark to comply with the recommendations of the relevant monitoring bodies of the Council of Europe, particularly by reinforcing linguistic rights and taking additional measures to combat manifestations of intolerance, racism and xenophobia.

32. Italy welcomed the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure and the Council of Europe Convention on Preventing and Combating Violence against Women and Domestic Violence (the Istanbul Convention), the legal amendment allowing dual citizenship, and increased protection measures for children with special needs and persons with disabilities.

33. Indonesia commended Denmark for its achievements, particularly on the rights of children and persons with disabilities, and its contribution to promoting universal ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment through the Convention against Torture Initiative. Indonesia noted challenges relating to hate crime and the need to take further measures to fully implement migrants' rights.

34. The Islamic Republic of Iran expressed concern at discrimination against minorities, especially Muslims, and migrants in employment, education and housing, at the increase in hate speech directed at refugees and Muslims on social media, and at the large number of children living without their parents and cared for outside the home.

35. Iraq commended Denmark for its legislative achievements, especially on the rights of children and persons with disabilities, its efforts to meet the needs of refugees and integrate them in society, in line with regulatory frameworks and amendments to integration law, and its adoption of laws prohibiting hate speech.

36. Canada noted the national action plans to stop violence against women and encouraged Denmark to pursue its efforts to protect women and girls from intimate partner violence.

37. Japan commended Denmark for its role in prohibiting torture and promoting gender equality. Japan was concerned at reported discrimination against persons belonging to minorities and non-citizens in relation to employment, education and housing and xenophobic discourse in the media. It welcomed initiatives to help migrants and refugees to integrate in society.

38. Kyrgyzstan praised Denmark for its continuous efforts to exercise its responsibility to uphold human rights standards and for its commitment to enhancing the promotion and protection of human rights.

39. Lebanon commended Denmark for its commitments to protecting and promoting human rights, particularly those of children, and its efforts to combat discrimination and xenophobia through various policies and rigorous standards, reflecting its commitments to human rights in general.

40. Libya welcomed the delegation, thanked it for presenting the national report and made recommendations.

41. Denmark emphasized that the Government regarded hate speech and hate crimes, online or not, as a high priority area in crime prevention. A monitoring programme had been launched, the results of which should facilitate better plans and national strategies on hate crime prevention in the future.

42. Danish legislation ensured comprehensive protection against discrimination on the grounds of race and ethnic origin. In an effort to promote tolerance and combat racism and xenophobia, the authorities, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society had carried out several initiatives.

43. The delegation, responding to comments, noted that in 2015, temporary protection status had been introduced for asylum seekers entitled to asylum on the basis of the general situation in their home country. Only about 20 per cent of those who had been granted asylum fell under the temporary protection status category. In general, the right to family reunification was deferred for that group. Exceptions to the deferral were made based on an individual assessment in each case, ensuring observance of the country's international obligations and ensuring that, where individual circumstances dictated it, family reunification was granted within the initial one-year period. That could be extended to three years pending a proposal that would be debated in Parliament.

44. Regarding seizure of valuables, the Danish welfare State was based on the principle that the State would provide and pay for individuals who were unable to take care of themselves. It would therefore provide for asylum seekers who were unable to take care of themselves. The authorities would be given the power to seize valuables, such as cash, that had a value of over approximately US$ 1,500 in order to cover expenses such as subsistence and housing during the processing of the asylum application. It was a misconception that that authorities would seize jewellery that was of sentimental value to the owner.

45. Newly arrived asylum seekers could be detained only when it was necessary to complete the registration and identification process and would be released immediately after completion of that process. Rejected asylum seekers could be detained only if they did not cooperate on their return and if deportation was possible. Both rules were in conformity with the international obligations of Denmark. A rule had been introduced suspending automatic access to judicial review of a detention within three days. The rule could be applied only in a period when there was a significant increase in refugees and migrants. On request, the lawfulness of a detention would be decided by a court as soon as possible.

46. Responding to a question, the delegation said that all newly arrived immigrants and refugees were offered training in the Danish language and on the basic functions of society, as well as activities to facilitate their access to the labour market or an education. Civil society played an important role in the integration process. For example, the Danish Red Cross ran a project offering a Danish friend to all newly arrived refugees to encourage and support their understanding of how Danish society worked while building bridges between cultures and fostering better cross-cultural understanding.

47. Denmark had made a commitment to ratify the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance. Denmark was currently examining the need for legislative amendments for Greenland and the Faroes in order to meet the obligations under the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. Denmark was party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and committed to its full implementation. However, many social and economic rights entailed important macroeconomic choices better decided upon in a parliamentary setting. Therefore there was no intention to ratify the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Denmark found that the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families did not consistently distinguish between migrant workers legally residing in a host country and migrant workers staying illegally. Granting social benefits to illegal migrant workers would undermine the Danish welfare State and encourage illegal migration. Denmark had ratified all the core conventions of the International Labour Organization (ILO) on workers' rights, which encompassed foreign nationals legally residing in Denmark.

48. The delegation stressed that an extensive evaluation had already been made, in the wake of the terror attacks in Paris and Copenhagen, of the level of preparedness of Denmark for acts of terror, which had led to initiatives to secure adequate safeguards against terror.

49. Lithuania welcomed the ratification by Denmark of the Istanbul Convention and its efforts to combat trafficking in children. Lithuania appreciated the cooperation of Denmark with OHCHR and its regular financial support to it.

50. Malaysia acknowledged initiatives aimed at improving the rights of persons with disabilities, at tackling child pornography and at raising awareness on human rights in business. Malaysia expressed concern at the proposal to confiscate cash and valuables from asylum seekers and urged Denmark to reconsider.

51. Maldives congratulated Denmark on its progress since the previous review and welcomed the adoption by Greenland of the Gender Equality Act in 2013 and the 2014-2017 Strategy and Action Plan against Violence.

52. Mexico acknowledged the progress made in the promotion and protection of human rights since the first cycle.

53. Montenegro welcomed steps to improve the legislative framework on the protection of children, persons with disabilities and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons. It noted the new monitoring system for hate crimes and the revised guidance on handling such cases. Montenegro shared the concern of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination about the increase in xenophobia and political propaganda targeting non-citizens and racist publications in the media.

54. Morocco welcomed the focus of Denmark on protecting the rights of children, vulnerable groups, asylum seekers and migrants as part of its efforts to implement the normative, institutional and legislative framework. It congratulated Denmark on its commitment and efforts to combat torture, especially through the international Convention against Torture Initiative.

55. Mozambique noted the progress Denmark had made by following the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and adopting action plans for persons with disabilities and to combat human trafficking. Mozambique referred to consultations on accession to Protocol No. 12 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights).

56. Namibia commended Denmark for its efforts to promote and protect children's rights, including through the amendment of nationality laws. Namibia remained concerned about the solitary confinement of children. It noted that the amendments to the Integration Act and the Aliens Act had improved the situation for refugees and migrants.

57. Nepal welcomed the entry into force of laws protecting children, vulnerable persons, persons with disabilities, refugees and migrants and concerning nationality rights. It appreciated the provision of development assistance to foster socioeconomic development, the support of Denmark for capacity-building in national human rights institutions and its financial contributions to OHCHR and other mechanisms.

58. The Netherlands encouraged Denmark to continue putting human rights at the forefront of policy, including when confronted with external challenges, as Europe currently faced. The Netherlands called for children's and young people's self-experienced gender to be recognized as authentic and legitimate.
59. New Zealand commended Denmark for its progress on gender pay equity. New Zealand referred to the challenges caused by the Syrian conflict, including the sudden influx of people into Denmark. It acknowledged efforts to address hate crimes.
60. Nicaragua highlighted progress in implementing recommendations related to children, persons with disabilities and gender equality. Nicaragua encouraged Denmark to continue combating human trafficking and to take into consideration recommendations made in other forums, including ILO.
61. Norway commended Denmark for establishing the Office for Children, while identifying limitations in its mandate, and for strengthening the Criminal Code and penalizing non-consensual sex with a victim in "helpless state" as rape. Norway noted that the legislation of the Faroe Islands lagged behind, particularly as it included a reduced penalty for rape and sexual violence within marriage.
62. Pakistan noted that little progress had been made in terms of giving consideration to cultural and religious sensitivities when designing social integration policies and programmes. Pakistan was concerned at the treatment of victims of trafficking and at the increasingly negative political discourse on migrants, especially Muslims, which was adversely affecting their socioeconomic situation.
63. Panama welcomed the ratification by Denmark of international human rights instruments, including the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.
64. The Philippines appreciated improved policies on migrants and asylum seekers, particularly the shift in the selection criteria for refugees, and the increased assistance for victims of trafficking. While the Philippines welcomed initiatives to protect and promote women's rights, it was concerned at the persistence of domestic violence.
65. Poland appreciated the adoption in Greenland of the Gender Equality Act, the National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and the action plan against violence in the family and in intimate relations. Poland welcomed the appointment in Greenland of the Minister for Gender Equality.
66. Portugal welcomed the establishment of the Office for Children and the ratification of the Istanbul Convention. It expressed concern about the progressive deterioration in conditions for asylum seekers and immigrants, including the detention of migrant children and the confiscation of refugees' belongings.
67. The Republic of Korea observed the progress Denmark had made in ensuring the rights of children and persons with disabilities in institutional and practical terms, and appreciated its efforts to reduce solitary confinement, particularly for juveniles.
68. The Republic of Moldova recognized the establishment of the Office for Children and the initiatives taken to safeguard the rights of vulnerable children and children at risk, but was concerned about children in institutional care and action taken to combat domestic violence, particularly as it affected children.
69. The Russian Federation was concerned that, despite the avowed commitment of Denmark to observing human rights standards, the situation was far from being beyond reproach. The Russian Federation expressed particular concern about the human rights situation of migrants and refugees.

70. Saudi Arabia commended the efforts taken to guarantee a better future for Danish citizens regardless of their origins. It was concerned, however, about reports of racism and discrimination based on religious beliefs, and denounced Islamophobia.

71. Serbia welcomed school reforms to improve academic results, increase pupils' well-being and reduce bullying, and commended efforts to eliminate discrimination against marginalized groups, particularly measures to combat sexism, stereotypes and harassment based on gender expression.

72. Singapore welcomed efforts to strengthen integration and ensure educational opportunities for ethnic minorities and recognized the challenges and opportunities posed by ethnic and religious diversity and the importance of maintaining social cohesion.

73. Slovakia acknowledged progress on implementing recommendations, including identifying law enforcement officials, and welcomed protection measures for vulnerable groups, particularly the new hotline for domestic violence victims. It noted that protection from bullying in schools was insufficient owing to the lack of clarity of the law and the failure to comply with it.

74. Slovenia welcomed the establishment of the Office for Children and the inclusion of the rights of the child in the teacher training curriculum, but noted problems with discrimination and segregation in schools, the education of children in alternative care and solitary confinement.

75. South Africa welcomed the adoption of a national strategy on gender mainstreaming and efforts to combat poverty and encouraged Denmark to promote, protect and fulfil human rights, including the right to development.

76. Estonia welcomed the efforts made by Denmark to protect children's rights, highlighting the establishment of the Office for Children and the helpline for children of divorced parents. It also welcomed the role of Denmark in promoting gender equality and women's rights, notably the results achieved in terms of women's participation in the labour market and decision-making positions. Estonia underlined the importance of the Greenland Human Rights Council and commended Denmark for its role in humanitarian aid and helping torture victims.

77. Sri Lanka noted the continued efforts of Denmark to develop its legislative and institutional frameworks to ensure human rights protection for its citizens, particularly children's rights through the establishment of the Special Office, and to increase the number of women in management positions and protect women from domestic violence.

78. Denmark would continue to allocate 0.7 per cent of its gross national income to development assistance and encouraged other countries to meet the recommended target for development assistance. It urged all countries to ensure that their citizens benefited fully from economic growth by combating bad governance and corruption.

79. Victims of human trafficking could apply for asylum or a residence permit like other foreign nationals. However, a residence permit would not be granted solely on the grounds that the person was a victim of trafficking. Circumstances relating to that fact might, however, be of relevance in the asylum assessment. If a victim of trafficking applied for asylum, a procedural stay would be granted while the case was processed.

80. The Children's Office within the Ombudsman Institution constituted an additional guarantee of legal protection of children in Denmark, when all other relevant means had been exhausted. It did not replace the existing complaints system.

81. Responding to a question on mother tongue teaching to children from non-European countries, the delegation said that an experimental programme designed to examine the effects of different teaching modules had been launched; about 3,500 pupils from 210 schools would participate in it. Regarding bullying, the focus was on empowering individual public primary and lower secondary schools to formulate an anti-bullying strategy.

82. The Government placed great importance on reducing the use of coercion in psychiatry. Funds had been allocated for trial runs with force-free units in psychiatric care. A task force had been formed to monitor the trials, which aimed for a 50 per cent reduction by 2020 in coercive measures and in the use of immobilization.

83. Responding to a question, the delegation said that the legal system already had a number of provisions prohibiting discrimination within and outside the labour market. Denmark was currently considering taking adequate measures to prohibit discrimination on the ground of disability.

84. The State of Palestine commended the progress made, including the establishment of an expert committee to examine the incorporation of international instruments. It noted the positive initiatives taken in promoting children's rights and welcomed the steps taken with regard to business and human rights, including the institution for responsible business.

85. Sweden commended efforts to improve gender equality while noting the need for continuous improvement to achieve equal opportunities for men and women. It expressed concern about the tendency for public discourse to be prejudicial towards migrants, sometimes even amounting to hate speech.

86. Thailand encouraged Denmark to expedite the revocation of territorial reservations of the human rights instruments for Greenland and Faroe Islands. It welcomed the Action Plan for Gender Equality and the limited use of solitary confinement as a disciplinary measure for inmates.

87. Tunisia noted the adoption of policies and measures for the implementation of recommendations from the first review and welcomed the excellent cooperation with treaty bodies and the commitment to official development assistance.

88. Turkey noted that Denmark hosted a relatively high number of refugees and welcomed humanitarian aid efforts and development programmes worldwide. It encouraged Denmark to strengthen efforts to eliminate racism, xenophobia and discrimination in society. It remained concerned about restrictions on family reunification.

89. Uganda noted the progress made since the last review, including the adoption in Greenland of the Gender Equality Act and the improvement of living conditions for asylum seekers and immigrants and their integration in society. It also noted that the amendment to the Aliens Act placed more restrictions on obtaining residence permits and that decisions of the Refugee Appeals Board could not be appealed before a court.

90. Ukraine commended efforts to improve the legislative framework on the protection of children, vulnerable people, asylum seekers and migrants and noted that between 2013 and 2015, Denmark had ratified or signed four international conventions. Ukraine encouraged Denmark to ratify the remaining conventions. Ukraine noted the steps taken towards implementation of the universal periodic review recommendations.

91. The United Arab Emirates recognized the commitment of Denmark to human rights and praised the measures it had taken to promote the rights of children and persons with disabilities, while expressing concern at reports of discrimination against minorities, such as Muslims.

92. The United Kingdom welcomed the action taken to limit the length of pretrial custody and the support of Denmark for universal ratification and implementation of the Convention against Torture and the Optional Protocol thereto. It urged continued efforts to prevent sexual and gender-based violence and to ensure that perpetrators were brought to justice and survivors given better support.

93. The United States of America encouraged continued efforts to address violence against women and domestic violence and to promote religious freedom. It urged Denmark to increase incentives for victims to secure their cooperation in the prosecution of traffickers. It expressed concern about the pending bill that would permit asylum seekers to be searched and their cash and valuables seized.

94. Uruguay commended Denmark for the high number of reports submitted to the treaty bodies. It noted the initiatives taken in protecting the rights of children and persons with disabilities and the advances made in relation to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender persons.

95. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela welcomed the adoption in Greenland of the Gender Equality Act, the establishment of the 24-hour hotline for victims of domestic violence and the adoption of the Disability Pension and Flexi Job scheme. The reform of State schools was an important step for increasing student welfare and reducing bullying.

96. Afghanistan appreciated the commitment of Denmark to a holistic and inclusive approach to refugees and immigrants and noted incentives to promote gender equality. It acknowledged the intention of Denmark to collaborate with national stakeholders in the application of human rights.

97. Albania commended Denmark for its Disability Policy Action Plan of 2013 and encouraged further endeavours to improve the protection of human rights, particularly focusing on gender equality and women from ethnic minority groups.

98. Algeria welcomed measures to combat domestic violence, the amendments to the law on nationality, initiatives to promote gender equality and the plan to combat trafficking in persons.

99. Argentina congratulated Denmark on the progress made in protecting persons with disabilities following the implementation of the Disability Policy Action Plan of 2013. It noted the new rules concerning family reunification.

100. Armenia noted the positive developments since the first review, particularly those relating to children and persons with disabilities. It welcomed the amendment to the Nationality Act allowing for dual citizenship. It appreciated the fact that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights continued to be taught in schools.

101. Australia commended Denmark for its accession to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. It welcomed the increased protection for children who were vulnerable to human trafficking, as well as initiatives to address gender inequality and violence against women and children. It noted the high level of discrimination against indigenous people, migrants and minority groups.

102. Austria commended efforts to implement recommendations, including the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. It expressed concern about amendments to the Aliens Act resulting from the refugee situation in Europe, and about the low number of cases of sexual and physical violence against women, stalking or harassment that went to trial or resulted in conviction, given the high number of reported cases.

103. Azerbaijan shared the concerns of several treaty bodies regarding the existence of problems related to discrimination, xenophobia, hate speech, Islamophobia, ethnic profiling, domestic violence, and minorities' and non-citizens' access to housing, health services, education and justice.

104. Bahrain expressed concern about racial discrimination and discrimination against ethnic groups and nationalities in terms of access to work, education and housing, as well as restrictions on family reunification and the negative political discourse on migration that was still widespread in political debates.

105. Belarus noted the continuous work of Denmark to improve its legal norms to protect human rights. It was concerned about reports in the mass media of racist speech from some politicians.

106. Benin expressed appreciation for the progress made in implementing the recommendations from the first review and noted measures to improve conditions for persons with disabilities by reforming the Disability Pension and Flexi Job scheme, the amendment to the Nationality Act and the situation of migrants and refugees.

107. The Plurinational State of Bolivia underscored the creation of the Office for Children.

108. Botswana commended the reform of the Disability Pension and Flexi Job scheme, the amendment to the Nationality Act and the establishment of the National Cyber Crime Centre. It noted reports of racial profiling, and of persons from minority groups and non-citizens facing structural discrimination with regard to access to employment, housing, health services, quality education and justice. It also noted the pretrial detention of children under 17.

109. Brazil noted the efforts to improve the general situation of human rights through the adoption of laws regarding children, vulnerable persons and persons with disabilities, lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender persons, refugees and migrants. Brazil was concerned about the situation of the increasing number of migrants, many of whom faced serious difficulties with the process of integration.

110. France welcomed the efforts of Denmark to combat torture and promote international criminal justice, particularly the work of the International Criminal Court.

111. Ireland commended Denmark for publishing its National Action Plan on the implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. Ireland noted with concern the amendments to the Aliens Act, which placed restrictions on family reunification for persons possessing temporary protection status.

112. Denmark stated that children placed in alternative care in a municipality other than their municipality of residence had to receive an educational offer within three weeks, during which time one-on-one education had to be offered to the child. Exceptions were made where the former municipality of residence could approve another educational offer for the child.

113. Denmark had in practice made every ministry responsible for assessing the gender impact of their new legislation. A strategy had been launched aiming at strengthening and systematizing gender mainstreaming done by public authorities. At the local level, a booklet had been published for municipalities with tools, best practices and recommendations for working with gender equality assessment activities.

114. The Refugee Appeals Board was an independent, quasi-judicial body that could not accept or seek direction from the Government. Its decisions were final. The Immigration Service was the first instance responsible for assessing claims for asylum. If the Immigration Service rejected an asylum application, the case would automatically be appealed to the Refugee Appeals Board.

115. Responding to a question, the delegation clarified that only persons under the most serious form of legal guardianship were precluded from voting in Danish Parliamentary elections.

116. The Faroe Islands had begun to look into different national monitoring mechanisms in the field of human rights that would be appropriate for Faroese society and that were in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles).

117. In Greenland, a mobile task force had been set up to help adults cope with psychological complications resulting from abuse in childhood. Corporal punishment of children was expected to be fully abolished by legislation adopted in 2016. A shelter had opened offering nationwide crisis and treatment services for battered women and their children. Two surveys addressing the extent of sexual abuse in Greenland would strengthen initiatives and actions in response to sexual abuse. Education was a priority in Greenland, which was making substantial investments in it, including with financial support from the European Union. Denmark had only one indigenous people according to the definition contained in the ILO Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) — the Inuits. That did not mean, however, that the Inughuit of Uummannaq were not capable of maintaining their identity and the use of their own language.

118. Denmark would remain vigilant in its work to promote and protect human rights and to actively contribute to improving the rights of people around the world. Denmark would formally launch its candidacy to the Human Rights Council for the period 2019-2021 at the opening of the thirty-first session.

119. Denmark appreciated all the views, questions and recommendations.
