Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its nineteenth session from 28 April 7 to 9 May 2014. The review of Norway was held at the 1st meeting, on 28 April 2014. The delegation of Norway was headed by Børge Brende, Minister of Foreign Affairs. At its 10th meeting, held on 2 May 2014, the Working Group adopted the report on Norway.

2. On 15 January 2014, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Norway: Congo, Indonesia and United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Norway:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/19/NOR/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/19/NOR/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/19/NOR/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by the Czech Republic, Germany, Liechtenstein, Mexico, the Netherlands, Portugal, Slovenia, Spain and the United Kingdom was transmitted to Norway through the troika. The questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation stated that the UPR mechanism was an important pillar of the Human Rights Council. Human rights were well protected in Norway and Norway had a longstanding commitment to human rights at both the international and national levels. In preparing the national report, Norway had consulted civil society.

6. The Norwegian State was established on the territory of two peoples: the Norwegians and the Sami, who were recognized as an indigenous people. There were five national minorities in Norway: Kven, Jews, Forest Finns, Roma and Romani.

7. In order to strengthen and simplify the legal framework on discrimination, the Government was currently working on a new comprehensive equality and anti-discrimination act. The delegation reaffirmed that Norway was waging a continuous battle against forced marriage and female genital mutilation.

8. In response to questions from the Netherlands and Portugal, the delegation stated that the Government had decided to establish a new independent national human rights institution that complied with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles).

9. The delegation stated that combating domestic violence was a priority for the Government. Domestic violence was totally unacceptable and perpetrators must expect to be prosecuted and punished. Important measures for combating domestic violence were prevention and early identification, help and protection for victims, prosecution and treatment of perpetrators, and competence-building within the police and welfare services.

10. Regarding asylum seekers who were minors, the delegation stated that the Government attached great importance to ensuring a rapid asylum process with legal safeguards for those children, as well as good living conditions during the process.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

11. During the interactive dialogue, 89 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue can be found in section II below.

12. Iraq noted that Norway had acceded to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) and ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (OP-CAT), and had made efforts to establish a national human rights institution that could make recommendations to improve the human rights situation.

13. Ireland noted the concerns expressed by the Committee against Torture and the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention about the lack of statistics on the use of solitary confinement. It also noted that, in 2012, the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions had recommended that the Norwegian Centre for Human Rights be downgraded from A to B status.

14. Iran (Islamic Republic of) expressed concern about a number of human rights issues.

15. Israel drew attention to a survey on the Norwegian population's attitudes towards the Jewish community which revealed that anti-Semitism and anti-Jewish harassment persisted. It asked what specific measures would be adopted to strengthen and support efforts to combat anti-Semitism.

16. Italy noted that despite the efforts that had been made, statistics on cases of domestic violence had not improved since the first UPR cycle.

17. Japan noted the unequal status of immigrants in the labour market and the low employment rate for immigrant women, and encouraged Norway to take further steps to address such issues.

18. Jordan commended the Human Rights Commission for recommending the incorporation of a number of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights in the Norwegian Constitution.

19. Kyrgyzstan noted the measures to combat violence against children that were included in the new action plan against domestic violence.

20. Libya highlighted the action being taken by Norway to protect the rights and well-being of children.

21. Malaysia enquired about the Government's plan of action on establishing a new national human rights institution and asked whether a timetable had been set to move the process forward. It encouraged the Government to implement the key national priorities set for its human rights agenda.

22. Maldives said that the new anti-discrimination legislation, particularly the act on accessibility for persons with disabilities, would help ensure equal opportunities in the workplace. However, more efforts were needed to promote tolerance and respect for diversity.

23. Mexico recognized the legislative and institutional progress made since the first UPR cycle, such as the ratification of international instruments and the introduction of legislation against discrimination. It encouraged Norway to establish a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles as soon as possible.

24. The Republic of Moldova noted the progress made in implementing the recommendations of the first UPR cycle and the international and national efforts to combat human trafficking, but challenges remained regarding procedures and criteria for identifying victims of trafficking.

25. Montenegro recognized the steps the Government had taken to promote human rights and implement new mechanisms to address problem areas, in particular discrimination and domestic violence.

26. The Netherlands noted the external review of the Norwegian Centre for Human Rights, which was not in compliance with the Paris Principles, and highlighted concerns about the situation of detainees, specifically the length of police custody.

27. New Zealand encouraged Norway to move to full implementation of CRPD, particularly regarding the use of coercion in mental health care, and noted the Government's desire to reduce the use of coercion in that context.

28. Nicaragua noted the growing number of women victims of trafficking and the prevalence of violence against women in Norway. It encouraged Norway to continue its leadership role in the Human Rights Council and to promote dialogue and cooperation between countries.

29. The Niger noted the new legislation enacted to combat discrimination, especially on the grounds of ethnicity, religion and disability, and the measures adopted to promote the rights of indigenous peoples, minorities, refugees and asylum seekers.

30. Nigeria invited Norway to accede to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (OP-ICESCR) and urged it to continue improving conditions for migrants, denounce racial discrimination in more practical terms and expedite the process of establishing a fully-fledged national human rights institution.

31. Pakistan was encouraged by efforts made by Norway to implement the recommendations from the first UPR cycle and steps taken over the previous four years to protect and promote human rights in the country.

32. Paraguay highlighted progress in terms of respect for human rights in Norway, but expressed concern that in 20 to 30 per cent of murders committed in the previous decade, the victim and perpetrator had been a couple.

33. The Philippines believed that Norway had much to share in terms of best practice on protecting and promoting human rights, but regretted that it had still not acceded to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (ICRMW), despite its steadfast advocacy for equality and non-discrimination.

34. The Norwegian delegation, in response to questions concerning the situation of the Roma, said that improving their situation was a priority for the Government. Norway was supporting measures for the social inclusion of the Roma through 80 programmes in 10 European countries.

35. A grant scheme had been established to provide humanitarian assistance to foreign beggars. Migrant Roma had not been targets of serious hate crime.

36. In response to a question from Mexico, the delegation said that the consultations between the central Government and the Sami Parliament would be undertaken in good faith with the objective of achieving agreement. The consultation mechanism ensured that decision makers were well acquainted with the views of the Sami Parliament.

37. In response to a question from Mexico on how indigenous people participate in decisions on the use of land and natural resources, the delegation referred to the Finnmark Act, which had established the Finnmark Estate, an independent entity that owned all the land in Finnmark county that had previously belonged to the State. The Sami Parliament appointed half of the Finnmark Estate board members.

38. In response to a question from Germany regarding indigenous peoples and mining activities, the delegation emphasized that the mineral industry played an important role in securing jobs and development in rural areas. Norwegian legislation included a number of provisions that safeguarded Sami interests in that context.

39. In response to a question from the Netherlands, the delegation emphasized that rape was a serious and totally unacceptable crime. In the Penal Code, rape was defined by listing factors that negate consent. The Government's ambition was to reduce the incidence of rape, assist victims in the best way possible and improve the way rape cases were handled in the criminal justice system.

40. In response to a question from the Netherlands about prolonged detention in police holding cells, the delegation stated that regulations required detainees to be transferred from police custody to a normal prison within 48 hours of their arrest, unless practical considerations made that impossible.

41. In response to questions from Ireland and the Netherlands on the use of solitary confinement in detention, the delegation said that major improvements had been made in that regard in recent years. The courts could approve isolation only if stringent conditions were satisfied and the time limits were strict. There had been a significant reduction in the use of solitary confinement, which was normally reserved for the most serious cases and lasted for short periods only. Concerning solitary confinement during the execution of sentences, the delegation described measures to ensure that solitary confinement was applied more selectively.

42. In response to questions and recommendations from Kyrgyzstan and Mexico on education for minors seeking asylum, the delegation indicated that all children in Norway had the same legal right and duty to attend primary and lower secondary school, regardless of background.

43. In response to a question from the United Kingdom concerning the standard of emergency shelters and social housing, especially for families with children, the delegation stated that Norwegian municipalities were obliged to find temporary accommodation for persons who were unable to find accommodation by themselves. The accommodation had to be of a sufficient standard to meet the needs of the persons concerned.

44. Responding to a question from Mexico on the export of arms or munitions, the delegation said that Norway had a strict, long-standing arms export policy. It did not permit the sale of arms or munitions to areas in which there was a war, civil war or threat of war.

45. Responding to a question from Spain, the delegation answered that the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights were a cornerstone of the Government's approach to human rights and business.

46. Responding to a question from Israel about combating anti-Semitism, Norway emphasized that knowledge was a key factor and described measures aimed at preventing anti-Semitism in schools.

47. Responding to questions from, inter alia, Malaysia, Paraguay, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia and Timor-Leste about the gender pay gap, the delegation stated that it had decreased over time, but that on average, women continued to earn 12.7 per cent less than men per hour, primarily owing to the gender divide in the labour market. The Government hoped to further reduce the gender pay gap.

48. In response to recommendations from Italy and New Zealand, the delegation emphasized that the Government would pursue efforts to reduce the use of coercion in the mental health services. The use of coercion was strictly regulated by law and could be used as a last resort only, in order to care for patients with serious mental illness.

49. Responding to recommendations that Norway should accede to ICRMW, the delegation said that Norway had ratified all the International Labour Organization core conventions on workers' rights, which also applied to residents who were foreign nationals. Norway had, however, decided not to accede to ICRMW.

50. The delegation noted that some States had recommended that Norway should accede to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure, OP-ICESCR and the Optional Protocol to CRPD. The Government was thoroughly investigating the legal implications before making a decision. Two legal studies had been commissioned and circulated for general review and those questions were still under consideration.

51. Norway was currently considering the question of ratification of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance (ICPED).

52. In response to questions from Mexico and others concerning hate crime, the delegation underlined the seriousness of such offences and reiterated that hatred towards specific groups was considered an aggravating circumstance by the courts. The Penal Code had been amended in 2013 to extend criminal liability for certain kinds of statements made in public to statements made on the Internet.

53. Poland noted efforts made by Norway to comply with the recommendations of the first review, but acknowledged that, despite many positive developments in the field of human rights, certain challenges remained.

54. Portugal observed that the dropout rate in upper secondary schools in Norway was higher among immigrant students. It requested further information about the Government's ongoing process to re-establish its national human rights institution.

55. The Russian Federation drew attention to problems relating to freedom of belief. It also noted that, when children were removed from parental care and placed with new families, insufficient attention was paid in some cases to their cultural, linguistic and religious identity. Moreover, foster children had reportedly been subjected to violence.

56. Rwanda noted efforts made by Norway to fulfil its human rights commitments since its last UPR, including improving gender equality and accessibility for persons with disabilities and combating forced marriage, female genital mutilation and domestic violence. It also commended Norway for its handling of the cases of genocide suspects through prosecution and extradition.

57. Saudi Arabia expressed concern about persistent cases of domestic violence, rape and hate crime targeted at certain ethnic groups and minorities, particularly Muslims. It urged the Government to take vigorous action against hate crimes and to promote the equality of all citizens.

58. Serbia acknowledged positive developments in strengthening human rights in the country. It suggested that Norway step up its efforts to address discrimination of vulnerable groups in the context of its national integration policy.

59. Sierra Leone commended Norway for its generous assistance to development overseas. It stressed the importance of developing strategies to promote tolerance and diversity and strengthening measures to ensure greater equality for women and minorities. It was concerned about reports of hate speech and hate crime against minority groups, asylum seekers and immigrants.
60. Slovenia recognized Norway as a role model in terms of safeguarding democracy, ensuring the rule of law and focusing efforts on addressing key human rights challenges currently facing States globally in a turbulent world.
61. South Africa expressed appreciation for the continued and consistent contribution of Norway to development projects in Africa. It noted efforts made by Norway since its last review and encouraged it to continue its efforts to promote, protect and fulfil human rights in the country.
62. Spain noted that the Government of Norway had decided to establish a new independent international human rights institution and that measures were being taken to tackle the problem of gender-based violence.
63. Cuba expressed concern about persistent discrimination against Romani, indigenous and immigrant communities, incitement to hatred, and xenophobic, anti-Semitic and Islamophobic statements.
64. The State of Palestine noted that Norway had taken measures to ascertain the nature, extent and causes of discrimination in various areas of society.
65. The Sudan enquired about the main achievements and lessons learned through the implementation of the Action Plan to Promote Equality and Prevent Ethnic Discrimination.
66. Switzerland expressed concern regarding the duration of police custody and of solitary confinement in both police custody and pretrial detention. It was also concerned about allegations of arbitrary deprivation of liberty and arbitrary constraint measures in mental health-care centres.
67. Thailand noted with interest the establishment of Children's Houses providing assistance to child victims of exploitation and abuse.
68. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia referred to treaty body concerns regarding gender inequality and inadequate representation of women with minority backgrounds in prominent societal roles. It enquired about the results of the work undertaken by KOMpakt, the Government's consultative body, and requested details of the 2013 white paper concerning domestic violence.
69. Timor-Leste noted that there were areas, such as gender equality, equal remuneration for men and women, and the right to education of indigenous peoples, in which further improvements were required.
70. Togo expressed concern about discrimination against the immigrant population, especially in the labour market, housing, education and health care.
71. Tunisia encouraged Norway to ratify CPED and to expedite the establishment of a national human rights institution that complied with the Paris Principles.
72. Turkey noted the increase in Islamophobic, anti-Semitic and racially motivated hate crimes.
73. Turkmenistan expressed concern about reports of an increase in xenophobic attitudes to immigrants. It noted with regret that trafficking in persons, particularly girls, remained a problem and noted with concern reports that the number of victims was steadily increasing.

74. Ukraine noted the establishment of an interministerial coordination group to strengthen the implementation of recommendations accepted by Norway and improve its reporting to the human rights treaty bodies.

75. The United Kingdom urged Norway to intensify its efforts to ensure that emergency shelters and social housing units met an adequate standard, especially for families with children, and to strengthen strategies to prevent discrimination against migrant Roma and provide for their basic needs.

76. The United States of America was concerned that preventive measures had not reduced the incidence of domestic violence and rape, and concerned at the high level of acquittals, lenient sentences and the legal definition of rape, which required the use or threat of force. It was also concerned at the treatment of asylum seekers and stateless persons, especially minors.

77. Uruguay encouraged Norway to complete the process of ratification of OP-ICESCR and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure.

78. Uzbekistan noted concerns about discrimination against immigrants, particularly in the labour market, education, health care and housing, and expressions of racial hatred and intolerance, especially against the Sami people, as well as high rates of violence against women and of human trafficking.

79. Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) expressed concern about the persistence of crimes motivated by prejudice and incitement to hatred against specific minority groups, such as the Roma.

80. Viet Nam noted that the strengthened legal framework in Norway better ensured gender equality and improved living standards for indigenous peoples and minorities. Norway participated in education, training and international cooperation in the field of human rights and was committed to the protection of vulnerable groups.

81. Albania said that Norwegian citizens benefited from the highest standards of democracy and freedom. Norway had developed human rights standards in respect of gender equality, the rights of persons with disabilities and those of minorities.

82. In response to questions from Liechtenstein and Spain and recommendations from the United States on asylum and immigration, the Norwegian delegation stated that the Government would continue to fulfil its international obligations in the areas of migration and asylum policies.

83. The Government maintained that the asylum system was a key tool in providing protection to those who were genuinely in need, and that it must not be abused. Asylum status was granted on the basis of individual processing and a thorough assessment of each application.

84. Responding to issues raised by the Islamic Republic of Iran, the Republic of Moldova and Nicaragua concerning trafficking in human beings, the delegation described, inter alia, the 2010 action plan on measures to fight all forms of human trafficking, steps to provide safe housing and appropriate follow-up of victims and provisions in the Immigration Act strengthening the protection of victims. The question of establishing a national referral mechanism to better identify and assist victims of trafficking was being assessed.

85. Responding to questions from India, the Russian Federation and Turkey, the delegation said that the purpose of the Child Welfare Act was to protect children. A care order was relevant only if the child's situation was serious and could not be alleviated through the application of voluntary assistance measures. The underlying principle of the Act was that a child should grow up with its biological parents. A care order could be issued only if a child's care was seriously deficient or the child was a victim of abuse.

86. Responding to questions about ethnic discrimination from, inter alia, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Mexico, Nigeria, Poland and the Sudan, Norway referred to the Action Plan to Promote Equality and Prevent Ethnic Discrimination.

87. Algeria encouraged Norway to expedite the process of establishing a new national human rights institution and to ratify ICRMW.

88. Angola, while noting the progress Norway had made on human rights, not least on gender equality issues, drew attention to the continuing problem of the integration of migrants, since that group suffered the highest levels of unemployment.

89. Argentina noted that Norway had indicated that it would prioritize ratification of ICPEP. Argentina shared its concern about and commitment to the elimination of discrimination.

90. Armenia appreciated the help Norway had provided to the survivors of the Armenian genocide, its integration policy for migrants and minorities and its commitment to the elimination of hate speech and hate crime.

91. Australia observed that the UPR report highlighted the consistent promotion by Norway of human rights and democratic principles. Norway had introduced four new anti-discrimination acts in January 2014, covering sexual orientation, gender equality, ethnicity and persons with disabilities.

92. Austria recognized the high standards that Norway had achieved in the promotion and protection of human rights, its contributions to the system of international human rights protection and its commitment to the advancement of human rights globally.

93. Azerbaijan highlighted concerns about discrimination against migrants, persons from immigrant backgrounds, asylum seekers and refugees in accessing public services, health services and employment, and allegations of ill-treatment of, and hate speech directed at, minorities and other vulnerable groups.

94. Bahrain expressed concern about reports of discrimination against minorities and indigenous peoples, especially women and children. It was also concerned about persistent hate speech and incitement to xenophobia and to religious hatred.

95. Bangladesh observed that Norway had not yet ratified ICRMW and that there remained scope for further attention to preventing discrimination against immigrants.

96. Belarus expressed concern about migrant integration and employment issues and the problems encountered by Roma, especially in the education system. It was also concerned about reports of incitement to hatred and other forms of intolerance, including by political parties.

97. Benin noted that Norway had ratified a number of international conventions on human rights, including CRPD and OP-CAT, in response to the recommendations received in 2009.

98. Botswana noted efforts made to address discrimination against migrants and asylum seekers, but encouraged Norway to do more to prevent violence. It also noted that challenges remained in gender mainstreaming and in combating substance abuse by children and young people.

99. Brazil referred to policies introduced to encourage gender equality, religious tolerance and access to social security by foreign residents. It indicated that immediate attention should be given to the best interests of the child, specifically in all immigration matters, and to the situation of migrants.

100. Canada asked what progress Norway had achieved since 2009 in generating data on manifestations of racial discrimination and the situation of minority groups in order to identify patterns of direct and indirect discrimination.

101. Chile noted that human rights had been strengthened through recent amendments to the Norwegian Constitution and that the country had the capacity to renew its efforts to tackle domestic violence, promote equality of opportunity and combat all forms of discrimination.

102. China noted the progress made in protecting children's rights and in combating domestic violence and human trafficking. However, violence against women continued, Roma and migrants suffered discrimination and the Sami language and culture could not be guaranteed.

103. The Republic of the Congo noted that more action was required to combat discrimination against women, minorities, indigenous peoples and persons of foreign origin. The fact that minors were detained together with adults was a cause for concern.

104. Costa Rica noted that Norway had ratified several international human rights instruments, introduced measures to combat discrimination against minorities and made commitments to improve the situation of asylum seekers and refugees.

105. Côte d'Ivoire noted the institutional and legislative reforms undertaken by Norway in respect of human rights, including gender equality and the rights of persons with disabilities, national minorities, migrants and asylum seekers.

106. Sri Lanka noted the progress made in the area of children's rights but stated that gender equality remained a challenge; higher education programmes were gender-divided and women earned lower wages than men. It acknowledged that targeted measures were being taken to tackle the high unemployment rate among immigrants.

107. The Czech Republic noted the efforts being taken in Norway to improve access to education for Roma. Reducing absenteeism required addressing the underlying social causes and the full cooperation of all stakeholders, including parents.

108. Denmark indicated that continuous monitoring and reporting of the human rights situation in Norway would be essential to track results of efforts made. It welcomed work on the draft Nordic Sami Convention, which would advance the rights of the Sami across country borders.

109. Ecuador was concerned at the situation of ethnic minorities, particularly the Roma, and at the high number of complaints by migrants of ill-treatment at the hands of the police and other representatives of the State.

110. Egypt urged Norway to address concerns regarding the treatment of migrants and to investigate allegations of racial profiling by law enforcement officers, refoulement of asylum seekers and disappearances of unaccompanied minors from asylum centres.

111. Estonia said that Norway had taken positive steps in ratifying international human rights instruments and in protecting the rights of indigenous peoples and minorities, including lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons (LGBTI).

112. Finland asked what targeted measures were being taken to ensure that more immigrant women could find work. Noting the disappearance of children from reception centres, it asked how Norway was working to protect children who sought asylum from becoming victims of trafficking.

113. France asked how Norway would make combating violence against women and children a priority and how it would ensure that sick children had equal access to health care in different parts of the country.
114. Gabon recognized the commitment of Norway to human rights and its ratification of human rights instruments. Norway combated inequalities in society and in particular was tackling the gender pay gap. Gabon asked about the results that had been achieved through the equality and anti-discrimination action plan.
115. Germany appreciated the efforts Norway had made in response to recommendations made in the previous cycle and recognized its very good national and international human rights record.
116. Ghana noted the commitment of Norway to upholding human rights, but expressed concern that certain minorities were the target of hate crime and racism. Efforts should be intensified to address the gender pay gap.
117. Greece expressed concern at the persistence of hate speech, as noted by the Human Rights Committee, and asked what action was being taken to fight it. Greece also expressed concern that the national human rights institution had been downgraded.
118. Guatemala noted the progress made in human rights in Norway but shared concerns at reports that over half of the immigrant population suffered discrimination in accessing employment, housing, education and health care.
119. Honduras acknowledged the efforts Norway had made to improve employment opportunities for immigrants by providing language training. It further noted the country's efforts to combat violence and rape.
120. Hungary considered the amendment to the Constitution to be a positive step, but sought clarification of the reference to the Church of Norway as the national church. Unaccompanied asylum-seeking children between the ages of 15 and 18 years suffered discrimination.
121. Iceland noted the commitment of Norway to achieving gender equality, combating domestic violence, and violence and sexual abuse against children and young people. It asked whether Norway intended to strengthen its assistance to victims of trafficking.
122. India noted the discrimination experienced by immigrants and asylum seekers in gaining access to public services and employment. A high incidence of rape had been reported, with half of victims being below the age of 18. Violence and hate speech persisted.
123. Indonesia noted the firm commitment of Norway to human rights. It requested that Norway ensure the protection of all minors in conflict with the law, taking into account the principle of the best interests of the child.
124. Romania highlighted developments in human rights in Norway since the previous UPR and a comprehensive mid-term report. It sought more information on human rights education in the country.
125. In response to a comment from Denmark, the Norwegian delegation said that Norway, Sweden and Finland had commenced negotiations on a Nordic Sami Convention in 2011. The aim was to complete the negotiations in 2016.
126. Responding to other questions, the delegation provided information about the action plan on domestic violence, the right of victims of domestic violence to free legal aid, the duty of local authorities to provide victims of domestic violence with shelter and coordinated assistance, and recent amendments to the Penal Code to increase the punishment for abuse in close relationships.

127. In response to questions from Libya and Thailand on investigations into offences against children, the delegation provided information about the judicial examination of children, which was carried out in special Children's Houses by specially trained police officers, and about measures aimed at reducing the waiting time before such examinations took place.

128. In response to a question from Brazil about immigration cases, the delegation underlined the importance of the best interest of the child, which was always a primary consideration. Regarding a question from Austria, the delegation described challenges and dilemmas concerning unaccompanied minor asylum seekers.

129. Responding to questions from Angola and Armenia about the integration of immigrants, Norway said that participation in working life and good Norwegian language skills were keys to integration in Norwegian society. The Government would improve its provision of language training and ensure that the Introduction Programme was better adapted to each individual.

130. In conclusion, Norway noted with appreciation the participation of all delegations in the review.
