Absurd and outrageous

In major step backwards, access to Ferghana news website blocked

21 February 2012

Reporters Without Borders very firmly condemns the semi-state owned company Kyrgyztelecom's blocking of access to the website of Ferghana (ferghananews.com), an independent news agency that covers central Asia.

Kyrgyztelecom chairman Askar Baratbayev announced today that his telecommunications company has blocked access to the Ferghana site in response to a formal request from the Kyrgyz state communications agency. The Kyrgyz parliament adopted a resolution to this effect last June (see below), but it had not been carried out until now.

"We are shocked," Reporters Without Borders said. "After months of silence, we had hoped that Kyrgyzstan's parliamentarians had realized the enormity of their resolution and decided not to apply it. Blocking a news website that is as professional and impartial as Ferghana's is a major step backwards for a country that aspires to be 'Central Asia's first parliamentary democracy'. We reiterate our appeal to the entire Kyrgyz political class, on which the democratic hopes of the April 2010 uprising are pinned, to end this absurd and outrageous situation."

In a resolution made public on 16 June 2011, the Kyrgyz parliament called for access to Ferghana to be blocked on the grounds that its coverage of violence in southern Kyrgyzstan in June 2010 had been "subjective" and "provocative."

Reporters Without Borders had described the news agency's coverage as "exemplary" (see below). However, Ferghana was criticized by some political tendencies for frequently raising questions about the future of Kyrgyz democracy and the rise of nationalism in the country.

17.06.2011 - Kyrgyz parliament orders blocking of news website of record

Reporters Without Borders is appalled by the Kyrgyz parliament's adoption of a resolution yesterday issuing a legally binding instruction to the prosecutor general's office, culture ministry and justice ministry to block access to the independent online news agency Ferghana (www.ferghananews.com) because of its coverage of last year's violence in the south of the country.

"Blocking access to Ferghana would constitute a very shocking attack on one of Kyrgyzstan's leading independent news media," Reporters Without Borders said. "Ferghana's coverage of the June 2010 clashes demonstrated an exemplary professionalism and desire to defuse tension. The order recalls the worst period of censorship in Kyrgyzstan. This press freedom violation is all the more unacceptable as Kyrgyzstan aspires to be a regional model of parliamentary democracy.”

The call for Ferghana’s blocking was contained in a resolution adopted yesterday after a special parliamentary commission presented the findings of its investigation into the June 2010 violence in the south. They included a recommendation to block Ferghana.

Reporters Without Borders wrote last week to the president of this parliamentary commission voicing alarm about this recommendation, especially as Ferghana is one of the leading news media of record in Kyrgyzstan and elsewhere in Central Asia.

Now that the recommendation has been adopted, Reporters Without Borders has decided to release the text of the letter.

Reporters Without Borders letter, dated 10 June 2011, to Tokon Mamytov, president of the parliamentary commission of enquiry into the events of June 2010:

Dear Mr. Mamytov,

Reporters Without Borders, an organization that defends media freedom, would like to express its alarm about a recommendation concerning the online news agency Ferghana (fergananews.com) that has been made by the parliamentary commission of enquiry into the events of June 2010.

As president of the commission, you announced during a plenary session of the Kyrgyz parliament on 9 June that the blocking of this news website within Kyrgyzstan would be one of the measures proposed in the parliamentary investigation’s conclusions because it had posted “subjective reports about the 2010 clashes.”

We are shocked by this attack on a leading news portal, one that plays such a key role for the media both in Kyrgyzstan and Central Asia in general. Thanks to the recognized professionalism of its journalists, Ferghana has for 12 years been providing quality reporting on political, economic and social developments and contributing to media plurality in the region.

Ferghana is not responsible for bad news, which it just relays and analyzes. During the events in Osh, the website exhibited exemplary responsibility and professionalism. While trying to provide detailed coverage of the tragic events unfolding in the south, it repeatedly carried calls for calm and constantly explained that the clashes had been provoked.

The parliamentary enquiry’s stature will be diminished if it opts for an all-out attack on independent media. The new government would be sending a terrible signal for freedom of expression if it blocked Ferghana. Previous attacks on the website have always coincided with crackdowns, as in 2005, on the eve of President Askar Akayev’s fall, and again in 2010, on the eve of President Kurmanbek Bakiyev’s ouster.

As the representative of a democratic body, you could not call for the elimination of one of your country’s most respected news outlets.

We thank you in advance for the attention you give to our letter.

Sincerely,

Jean-François Julliard Reporters Without Borders secretary-general
