Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict

Conclusions on children and armed conflict in Iraq

1. At its 57th meeting, on 2 March 2016, the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict examined the second report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Iraq (S/2015/852), introduced by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict. The Deputy Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations also addressed the Working Group.
2. The members of the Working Group welcomed the submission of the report of the Secretary-General, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009), 1998 (2011), 2068 (2012), 2143 (2014) and 2225 (2015), and took note of the analysis and recommendations contained therein.
3. The members of the Working Group noted from the briefing of the Special Representative the worsening trend of violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict in Iraq, following the emergence of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL/Da'esh). Those included the systematic recruitment and use of children by ISIL/Da'esh, the use of children as suicide bombers and executioners, and the increasing use of sexual violence, including rape and sexual slavery, as a tactic of war.
4. The members of the Working Group also noted the continued use of children by the popular mobilization forces, which had been placed under the authority of the Prime Minister. Another issue of concern was the detention of children on security charges under anti-terrorism laws, with questions raised on respect for due process and reports of ill-treatment and acts amounting to torture.
5. The Deputy Permanent Representative of Iraq reaffirmed the country's commitment to continuing to engage the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General. The statement made by the Deputy Permanent Representative of Iraq is annexed to the present conclusions.
6. Further to the meeting, and subject to and consistent with applicable international law and relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 1612 (2005), 1882 (2009), 1998 (2011), 2068 (2012), 2143 (2014) and 2225 (2015), the Working Group agreed to the direct action set out below.

Public statement by the Chair of the Working Group

7. The Working Group agreed to address a message, through a public statement by the Chair of the Working Group, to all parties to the armed conflict in Iraq:

(a) Recalling the previous conclusions of the Working Group on children and armed conflict in Iraq (S/AC.51/2011/6), and reiterating the call for their full implementation;

(b) Expressing its strongest condemnation of all continuing violations and abuses committed against children in contravention of applicable international law in Iraq, and urging parties to the armed conflict to comply with their obligations under international law and to take all measures necessary to immediately end and prevent such violations and abuses, including those involving the recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming, rape and other forms of sexual violence, abduction, attacks against schools and hospitals and the denial of humanitarian access;

(c) Expressing grave concern over the large number of children killed and maimed as a direct or indirect result of hostilities between parties to the armed conflict and of incidents of indiscriminate attacks against the civilian population, including those involving heavy shelling and aerial bombardment, and calling upon all parties to respect their obligations under international humanitarian law, and in particular the principles of distinction and proportionality enshrined therein;

(d) Expressing grave concern at the continuing recruitment and use of children in violation of applicable international law, and strongly urging all parties to the armed conflict to immediately and without preconditions release all children within their ranks, in close cooperation with the United Nations and relevant child protection actors, where possible;

(e) Strongly condemning the targeting of schools and hospitals in violation of international humanitarian law, and noting with deep concern that such attacks, the military use of schools in contravention of applicable international law and the targeting of education and medical personnel endanger the safety of children and severely disrupt their access to education and health care;

(f) Urging all parties to the conflict to cease attacks or threats of attacks against schools and hospitals, as well as their personnel, in violation of international humanitarian law and to respect the civilian character of those institutions and their personnel in accordance with international humanitarian law.

8. The Working Group agreed to address a message, through a public statement by the Chair of the Working Group, to all armed groups operating in Iraq, in particular ISIL/Da'esh:

(a) Condemning in the strongest possible terms the abhorrent violations and abuses committed against children by armed groups, in particular ISIL/Da'esh, including their killing and maiming, systematic recruitment and use, abduction and rape, and other forms of sexual violence, noting that such violations may amount to war crimes or crimes against humanity, and strongly demanding that all armed groups immediately:

(i) Cease attacks directed against civilians and civilian objects that result in the killing and maiming of children and comply fully with international humanitarian law by, inter alia, putting an end to any targeting of the civilian population, especially children, in violation of international humanitarian law, as well as to terror tactics and indiscriminate attacks in populated areas, including through attacks by suicide bombers or any other form of extreme violence or the indiscriminate use of weapons, in particular improvised explosive devices, and any use of weapons prohibited by international law;

(ii) Cease and prevent the recruitment and use of children in violation of applicable international law, including through abduction, end the military training of children, disband its youth wings and release without preconditions all children within their ranks;

(iii) Cease the abduction of children and all violations and abuses committed against abducted children, in particular rape, sexual slavery and other forms of sexual violence against children, especially girls, and release without preconditions all abducted children whose whereabouts remain unknown;

(b) Condemning attacks against humanitarian personnel and facilities, and stressing that the denial of humanitarian assistance, including by deliberately impeding humanitarian access, in particular to those trapped in besieged areas, can constitute a breach of international humanitarian law and have a serious impact on children.

9. The Working Group agreed to address a message, through a public statement by the Chair of the Working Group, to the Government of Iraq:

(a) Recognizing the commitments of the Government to enhance the protection of children in Iraq, in particular those made towards establishing an interministerial committee on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) to support the monitoring and reporting mechanism on children and armed conflict, and strongly urging in this regard its urgent activation by the Government;

(b) Recalling the commitment of the Government to adopt measures to criminalize the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, and requesting it to immediately implement those measures by taking all appropriate legal and judicial measures against the recruitment and use of children.

10. The Working Group agreed to address a message, through a public statement by the Chair of the Working Group, to community and religious leaders:

(a) Emphasizing their important role in strengthening the protection of children in armed conflict;

(b) Urging them to continue to publicly condemn and advocate end to and preventing violations and abuses against children, in particular those involving recruitment and use of children, and encouraging them to engage with the Government and the United Nations to support efforts to put an end to child recruitment and use by parties to the armed conflict, in conformity with the laws of Iraq.

Statement by the Deputy Permanent Representative of Iraq to the United Nations on the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Iraq (S/2015/852), made at the 57th formal meeting of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict

Translated from Arabic

At the outset, I would like to thank the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict for allowing my delegation to attend this session and present Iraq's position on the Secretary-General's report, which covers the period from January 2011 to June 2015 and which my delegation has reviewed.

After receiving the first draft of the report on 15 September 2015, the Permanent Mission held several bilateral meetings with the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and we made some observations and comments on a number of paragraphs. We submitted them officially and asked that they be taken into consideration when the final copy of the report was issued. However, those observations and comments were not incorporated into the final draft of the report. While Iraq appreciates the efforts made in preparing the report and shedding light on the grave violations committed daily by Islamic State in the Levant (ISIL) terrorist gangs against Iraqi children from all segments of society, we feel obliged to reiterate our observations on the report.

A number of paragraphs, such as the paragraph on the Hawijah incident, appear to have been inserted into the report in a subjective manner that is not in keeping with the Special Representative's mandate. The report also contains political analyses, extrapolations and inferences about the causes and roots of terrorism and violence in Iraq. It states that specific components of Iraqi society have been subject to violations and abuses, when in fact all Iraqis have been exposed to the dangers of terrorism and are fighting together to defend their land, honour, property and holy places.

Certain figures and data on injured children in the report are inflated, exaggerated and inaccurate, in some cases to the point of being inconsistent and contradictory. We wonder how far the Office of the Secretary-General went to verify such information from its sources and how appropriate and credible those sources are.

Those sources are not reliable. The information they provided comes via e-mail from activists and certain organizations whose motives are suspect. The figures cannot be verified because they come from sources located not in the theatre of operations or even in the liberated areas, but rather in offices in Baghdad, and possibly include — we are sorry to say — certain individuals in the office of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI). Our Mission has had a number of discussions about the figures and data in the report with Ján Kubiš, who admitted that neither his office nor any other agency was able to verify them.

The report places the crimes, violations and brutal practices of the ISIL terrorist gangs — which include murder, torture, sexual violence, slavery, kidnapping and forced marriage — on the same footing as isolated cases of individual wrongdoing on the part of Iraqi security forces and the organizations fighting alongside them — which are of the sort that occur in most armed conflicts. I would also like clarification from the Office of the Secretary-General regarding the use of the term “parties to the conflict” and whether it applies to the situation in Iraq. That term should not be used in the context of counter-terrorism. Iraq is fighting terrorist gangs that have come to wage war on its territory and in its cities. Those gangs have violated Iraq’s sovereignty, infiltrated its territory and committed horrific crimes against its citizens. The Iraqi armed forces and the tribal volunteers fighting alongside them are merely trying to restore security, order and the rule of law. Furthermore, the Government of Iraq has a legal and moral obligation to protect civilians, whereas the terrorists are under no such obligation. It is totally unacceptable to equate the ISIL terrorist gangs with the Iraqi security forces by referring to them as “parties to the conflict”.

The report makes reference in several places to child casualties from specific communities, implying that there are ideological, confessional or sectarian conflicts or disputes going on, which is not the case. In fact, the terrorist acts that have been committed in Iraq have been directed against all groups in society, as was the case, for example, with the recent criminal terrorist incident that occurred last Sunday in a busy market in Sadr City.

The report also refers to the recruitment of children by the popular mobilization units. We would like to point out that the popular mobilization volunteers are subject to the same military legislation as their counterparts in the security forces. The popular mobilization is under the Prime Minister, who is Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, and it maintains the same recruitment and training procedures as the security forces. None of the forces and units that comprise the popular mobilization use people who are under the legal age.

The fatwa handed down by the religious authorities on 5 June 2015, which was addressed in this report, was not intended to recruit schoolchildren into the popular mobilization militias. It merely urged students to train psychologically and physically to defend themselves, and to take advantage of the summer holidays to better prepare themselves to defend the country against the terrorist onslaught. Iraq is not alone in having summer camps; many stable, advanced countries provide similar activities for students during the holidays.

The Iraqi Penal Code provides for life imprisonment for offenders between 18 and 20 years of age. Under Iraqi law, the death penalty may only be applied to offenders over the age of 20.

The Government of Iraq is carrying out its obligation to protect schools, hospitals and infrastructure from attacks by terrorist gangs despite facing great challenges, including the huge costs associated with the war on terrorism, particularly given the sharp decrease in the price of oil and the burden of taking care of displaced persons.

Finally, the Government of Iraq has been working tirelessly under extremely difficult conditions to protect the rights of all segments of Iraqi society, particularly those of children. It takes all measures necessary to guarantee their protection, in fulfilment of its moral and legal responsibilities. It rejects certain claims contained in the report.
