

Amicus curiae* of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees¹ in case number 19-028135ASD-BORG/01 regarding [REDACTED] [REDACTED] (represented by lawyer Arild Humlen) against the State/the Norwegian Appeals Board before the Borgarting Court of Appeal (Borgarting Lagmannsrett)
on the interpretation of the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees

I. UNHCR’s mandate and role

1. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (hereafter “UNHCR”) has been entrusted by the United Nations General Assembly with a mandate to provide international protection to refugees and, together with Governments, seek permanent solutions for refugees.² According to its Statute, UNHCR fulfils its mandate inter alia by “[p]romoting the conclusion and ratification of international conventions for the protection of refugees, supervising their application and proposing amendments thereto[.]”³ This supervisory responsibility is reiterated in Article 35 of the 1951 Convention and Article II of the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees (hereafter collectively referred to as “1951 Convention”).⁴
2. UNHCR’s supervisory responsibility is exercised in part by the issuance of interpretative guidelines on the meaning of provisions and terms contained in international refugee instruments, in particular the 1951 Convention.⁵ UNHCR also provides information on a regular basis to decision-makers and courts of law concerning the proper interpretation and application of the provisions in the 1951 Convention. The status of UNHCR statements and publications, including in particular the UNHCR Handbook on Procedures and Criteria for Determining Refugee Status (hereafter “UNHCR Handbook”) and subsequent Guidelines on International Protection, as normative guides, have been acknowledged by numerous Courts and have been found by the Supreme Courts of Canada, the United Kingdom, and of the United States to be a “highly relevant

¹ This amicus curiae does not constitute a waiver, express or implied, of any privilege or immunity which UNHCR and its staff enjoy under applicable international legal instruments and recognized principles of international law. See, UN General Assembly, Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, 13 February 1946, www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3902.html.

² UN General Assembly, Statute of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, 14 December 1950, A/RES/428(V), www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3628.html.

³ UNHCR Statute, para. 8(a).

⁴ UN General Assembly, Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 28 July 1951, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 189, p. 137, www.refworld.org/docid/3be01b964.html. According to Article 35 (1) of the 1951 Convention, UNHCR has the “duty of supervising the application of the provisions of the Convention”.

⁵ Such guidelines are included in the UNHCR Handbook on Procedures and Criteria for Determining Refugee Status and complementary Guidelines on International Protection: UNHCR, Handbook on Procedures and Criteria for Determining Refugee Status and Guidelines on International Protection Under the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, April 2019, HCR/1P/4/ENG/REV. 4, www.refworld.org/docid/5cb474b27.html.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

authority,”⁶ “highly persuasive authority,”⁷ providing “significant guidance”⁸ and “should be accorded considerable weight.”⁹

3. UNHCR’s supervisory responsibility has also been reflected in European Union law, including by way of a general reference to the 1951 Convention in Article 78(1) of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union.¹⁰ Secondary EU legislation also emphasizes the role of UNHCR.¹¹
4. UNHCR also provides information on a regular basis to decision-makers and courts of law concerning the interpretation and application of the provisions in the 1951 Convention and has a history of third-party interventions in many national and regional jurisdictions. The Office is often approached directly by courts or other interested parties to obtain UNHCR’s “unique and unrivalled expertise”¹² on particular legal issues. UNHCR has, for example, been granted intervener status by the European Court of Human Rights (hereafter “ECtHR”)¹³ and has appeared as a third party before the Court

⁶ Chan v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration), [1995] 3 S.C.R. 593, Canada: Supreme Court, 19 October 1995, www.refworld.org/cases/CAN_SC.3ae6b68b4.html, paras. 46 and 119; Canada (Attorney General) v. Ward, (“Ward”), [1993] 2 S.C.R. 689, Canada: Supreme Court, 30 June 1993, www.refworld.org/cases/CAN_SC.3ae6b673c.html, pp. 713-714.

⁷ R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, Ex parte Adan, United Kingdom: House of Lords (Judicial Committee), 19 December 2000, www.refworld.org/cases/GBR_HL.3ae6b73b0.html.

⁸ Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421; 107 S. Ct. 1207; 94 L. Ed. 2d 434; 55 U.S.L.W. 4313, U.S. Supreme Court, 9 March 1987, www.refworld.org/cases/USSCT.3ae6b68d10.html.

⁹ Al-Sirri (FC) (Appellant) v Secretary of State for the Home Department (Respondent) and DD (Afghanistan) (FC) (Appellant) v Secretary of State for the Home Department (Respondent), [2012] UKSC 54, United Kingdom: Supreme Court, 21 November 2012, www.refworld.org/cases/UK_SC.50b89fd62.html, para. 36. Similarly, the Handbook has been found “particularly helpful as a guide to what is the international understanding of the Convention obligations, as worked out in practice”. R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, Ex parte Robinson, Case No: FC3 96/7394/D, United Kingdom: Court of Appeal (England and Wales), 11 July 1997, www.refworld.org/cases/GBR_CA_CIV.3ae6b72c0.html, para. 11.

¹⁰ European Union, Consolidated version of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, 13 December 2007, OJ C 115/47 of 9.05.2008, www.unhcr.org/refworld/docid/4b17a07e2.html.

¹¹ For instance, Recital 22 of the recast Qualification Directive states that consultations with UNHCR “may provide valuable guidance for Member States when determining refugee status according to Article 1 of the Geneva Convention”. European Union: Council of the European Union, Directive 2011/95/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 December 2011 on standards for the qualification of third-country nationals or stateless persons as beneficiaries of international protection, for a uniform status for refugees or for persons eligible for subsidiary protection, and for the content of the protection granted (recast), 20 December 2011, OJ L 337; December 2011, pp. 9-26, www.refworld.org/docid/4f197df02.html (hereafter “EU Qualification Directive”). The supervisory responsibility of UNHCR is specifically articulated in Article 29(c) of Directive 2013/32/EU on common procedures for granting and withdrawing international protection (recast), which obliges Member States to allow UNHCR “to present its views, in the exercise of its supervisory responsibilities under Article 35 of the Geneva Convention, to any competent authorities regarding individual applications for asylum at any stage of the procedure.” European Union: Council of the European Union, Directive 2013/32/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 June 2013 on common procedures for granting and withdrawing international protection (recast), 29 June 2013, OJ L 180/60 -180/95; 29.6.2013, 2013/32/EU, www.refworld.org/docid/51d29b224.html.

¹² R (on the application of EM (Eritrea)) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, [2014] UKSC 12, United Kingdom: Supreme Court, 19 February 2014, www.refworld.org/cases/UK_SC.5304d1354.html, para.72.

¹³ UNHCR intervention before the European Court of Human Rights in the case of M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece, June 2010, www.refworld.org/docid/4c19e7512.html; UNHCR intervention before the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Abdolkhani and Karimnia v. Turkey, January 2009, www.refworld.org/docid/4991ad9f2.html.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

of Justice of the European Union (CJEU).¹⁴ UNHCR has also intervened before various domestic courts, such as the US Supreme Court, the Supreme Court and former House of Lords of the United Kingdom, the German Federal Constitutional Court, the Supreme Court of Canada as well as the Supreme Court and the Borgarting Court of Appeal in Norway. Both courts in Norway have previously accepted UNHCR's written submissions and oral interventions.¹⁵

5. According to Section 15-8 of the “Tvisteloven” - the Norwegian Dispute Act¹⁶ - written submissions may be made in court proceedings by “organisations and associations within the purpose and normal scope of the organisation” in order to shed light on matters of public interest. UNHCR has a direct interest in ensuring a proper and consistent interpretation of the 1951 Convention as part of its supervisory responsibility, including in the present case, which concerns the question of whether the concept of Internal Flight or Relocation Alternative (hereafter “IFA”) may be applied in the context of cessation of refugee status under Article 1C (5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention. UNHCR submits this amicus curiae in order to assist the Borgarting Court of Appeal.

II. Question addressed in this submission

6. In the present amicus curiae, in light of its mandate as outlined above, UNHCR wishes to provide its views on the question of whether an IFA may be applied in the context of cessation of refugee status. In doing so, these submissions will outline UNHCR's views on the interpretation and application of the IFA concept, the “ceased circumstances” clauses of Article 1C(5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention, and the applicability of the IFA concept in the context of cessation for reasons of “ceased circumstances”. Further, UNHCR provides information about the current security and human rights situation in Kabul and in Afghanistan more broadly.
7. Bearing in mind the interaction between the 1951 Convention and international human rights law, UNHCR makes specific reference to relevant provisions of human rights law, including the jurisprudence of the ECtHR. Moreover, UNHCR makes reference to EU primary and secondary law and the jurisprudence of the CJEU in so far as the European ¹⁴ UNHCR intervention before the CJEU in the cases of N.S. v. Secretary of State for the Home Department in United Kingdom and M.E. and Others v. Refugee Application Commissioner and the Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform in Ireland, 1 February 2011, www.refworld.org/docid/4d493e822.html; UNHCR intervention before the CJEU in the cases of Minister voor Immigratie en Asiel v. X, Y and Z, 28 September 2012, www.refworld.org/docid/5065c0bd2.html; Written Observations of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the cases of A and Others (C-148/13, 149/13 and 150/13), 21 August 2013, www.refworld.org/docid/5215e58b4.html.

¹⁵ Amicus curiae of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on the interpretation and application of Article 25, Article 27 and Article 28 of the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 22 December 2016, www.refworld.org/docid/58a2f9984.html; HR-2015-02524-P, Case no. 2015/203, Norway: Supreme Court, 18 December 2015, www.refworld.org/docid/56cc6e2c4.html, at para. 35.

¹⁶ Lov 17. juni 2005 nr. 90 om mekling og rettergang i sivile tvister (Tvisteloven), unofficial English translation, <http://app.uio.no/ub/ujur/oversatte-lover/data/lov-20050617-090-eng.pdf>.

legal framework may provide useful guidance on the interpretation of the issues listed above.¹⁷

8. UNHCR only addresses issues of legal principle arising from this question and does not address or comment on the particular facts of the present case or positions taken by the parties.

The concept of “Internal Flight Alternative” in the context of Article 1A (2)

9. The criteria for the granting of refugee status are set out in Article 1A(2) of the 1951 Convention and are to be interpreted in a liberal and humanitarian spirit,¹⁸ in accordance with their ordinary meaning, and in light of the object and purpose of the 1951 Convention.¹⁹ UNHCR submits that the IFA concept can be applied only in the context of assessments of eligibility for international protection within Article 1A (2), and not with regard to cessation of status within Article 1C (5) and (6) (see further below at 26), and not in the context of a cessation assessment.
10. UNHCR’s views on the interpretation and application of IFA are contained in UNHCR’s Guidelines on “Internal Flight or Relocation Alternative” within the Context of Article 1A (2) of the 1951 Convention and/or 1967 Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees (hereafter “UNHCR IFA Guidelines”).²⁰ The concept of IFA refers to “a specific area of the country where there is no risk of a well-founded fear of persecution and where, given the particular circumstances of the case, the individual could reasonably be expected to establish him/herself and live a normal life.”²¹ As such, the question of an IFA is only relevant in particular and limited circumstances. Where, in the context of a holistic assessment of an asylum application, a well-founded fear of persecution linked to a 1951 Convention ground has been established in a localized part of the country of origin, the possibility of an IFA requires an assessment of the *relevance*²² as well as the

¹⁷ The Norwegian Immigration Act of 2010 (hereafter the Immigration Act) largely builds on provisions of the Qualification Directive, see preparatory works to the Act: Norwegian Immigration Act (NOU 2004:20) and Proposition no. 75 (2006-2007) to the Odelsting on the Immigration Act 2008. According to the preparatory works the main feature of Section 28 of the Immigration Act is that it widens the scope of refugee status to include not only refugees recognized under the 1951 Convention according to Section 28, paragraph one, litra a), but equally as regards other persons in need of international protection who are at real risk of death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment upon return to a home country as codified in Section 28, paragraph one, litra b) of the Act.

¹⁸ UNHCR, Guidelines on International Protection No. 4: “Internal Flight or Relocation Alternative” within the Context of Article 1A(2) of the 1951 Convention and/or 1967 Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees (“UNHCR IFA Guidelines”), 23 July 2003, HCR/GIP/03/04, www.unhcr.org/refworld/docid/3f2791a44.html, para 2.

¹⁹ The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties confirms that a treaty shall be “interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of the treaty in the context and in the light of its object and purpose.” United Nations, Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 23 May 1969, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1155, p. 331, www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3a10.html, Article 31(1). The Vienna Convention permits recourse to supplementary means of interpretation, including the travaux préparatoires, only where the meaning of the treaty language is “ambiguous or obscure; or leads to a result which is manifestly absurd or unreasonable.” Article 32.

²⁰ UNHCR, IFA Guidelines.

²¹ UNHCR, IFA Guidelines, para. 6.

²² For an IFA to be relevant, UNHCR considers that certain conditions must be met. First, an assessment of whether the applicant would be exposed to the original risk of being persecuted in the proposed area of IFA must be carried out. If

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

*reasonableness*²³ of relocation to the proposed area, as explained in UNHCR’s IFA Guidelines.²⁴ The determination of whether the proposed IFA is an appropriate alternative for the applicant “requires an assessment over time, taking into account not only the circumstances that gave rise to the persecution feared, and that prompted flight from the pre-flight place of the original area, but also whether the proposed area provides a meaningful alternative in the future.”²⁵

11. The above standards are broadly reflected in the case law of the ECtHR. In Salah Sheekh v. the Netherlands,²⁶ the Court examined the question of an IFA in the context of return to Somalia and laid out the following principles for IFA application under Article 3 ECHR:

“as a precondition for relying on an internal flight alternative, certain guarantees have to be in place: the person to be expelled must be able to travel to the area concerned, to gain admittance and be able to settle there, failing which an issue under Article 3 [ECHR]²⁷ may arise, the more so if in the absence of such guarantees there is a possibility of the expellee ending up in a part of the country of origin where he or she may be subjected to ill-treatment.”²⁸

12. Moreover, the Court has outlined that “[i]n order to determine whether there is a risk of ill-treatment, the Court must examine the foreseeable consequences of sending the applicant to the receiving country, bearing in mind the general situation there and his personal circumstances.”²⁹

13. The EU Qualification Directive also foresees the IFA assessment to be part of the inclusion assessment. Article 8(1) of the Directive, concerning internal protection “as the applicant has a well-founded fear of persecution at the hands of the State or its agents, there is a presumption that consideration of an IFA is not relevant, as national authorities are presumed to act throughout the country. Secondly, an assessment is needed of whether the applicant would be exposed to new risks of being persecuted, which are distinct from the original fear of persecution on which his/her claim is based, which arise in the proposed area of IFA, or to other forms of serious harm. Finally, an assessment on whether the proposed area of IFA is practically, safely and legally accessible to the individual must be conducted. For further information about the relevance analysis, see UNHCR, IFA Guidelines, paras. 9-21.

²³ UNHCR emphasizes that the assessment of reasonableness must (1) include a consideration of objective, “baseline” standards, and the extent to which conditions in the proposed place of relocation meet such standards; and (2) focus on the personal circumstances of the particular individual, and how conditions in the proposed place of relocation may impact upon that particular individual. For a proposed IFA to be reasonable, the applicant must be able to exercise his/her basic human rights in the area of relocation and s/he must have possibilities for economic survival in dignified conditions. For further information about the reasonableness analysis, see UNHCR, IFA Guidelines, paras. 22-30.

²⁴ UNHCR, IFA Guidelines, para. 7.

²⁵ UNHCR, IFA Guidelines, para. 8.

²⁶ Salah Sheekh v. the Netherlands, 1948/04, ECtHR, 11 January 2007, www.refworld.org/cases/ECHR.45cb3dfd2.html.

²⁷ European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, as amended by Protocols Nos. 11 and 14, 4 November 1950, ETS 5, www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3b04.html.

²⁸ Salah Sheekh v. the Netherlands, 1948/04, ECtHR, 11 January 2007, para. 141: (note 26 above). See also Chahal v. The United Kingdom, 70/1995/576/662, ECtHR, 15 November 1996, www.refworld.org/cases/ECHR.3ae6b69920.html and Hilal v. The United Kingdom, 45276/99, ECtHR, 6 June 2001, www.refworld.org/cases/ECHR.3deb99dfa.html.

²⁹ Vilvarajah and Others v. The United Kingdom, 45/1990/236/302-306, ECtHR, 26 September 1991, www.refworld.org/cases/ECHR.3ae6b7008.html, para. 108.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

part of the application of international protection”, states that “Member States may determine that an applicant is not in need of international protection if in a part of the country of origin, he or she: (a) has no well-founded fear of being persecuted or is not at real risk of suffering serious harm; or (b) has access to protection against persecution or serious harm [...]; and he or she can safely and legally travel to and gain admittance to that part of the country and can reasonably be expected to settle there.”

Article 1C (5) and (6) – the “ceased circumstances” clauses

14. In line with the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties,³⁰ when interpreting the cessation clauses, it is important to bear in mind the broad durable solutions context of refugee protection informing the 1951 Convention, including the cessation clauses contained in Article 1C (5) and (6).³¹ Accordingly, cessation practices should be developed in a manner consistent with the goal of durable solutions.³²
15. The 1951 Convention recognizes that refugee status ends under certain clearly and exhaustively defined conditions. Article 1C of the 1951 Convention sets out provisions for cessation of refugee status where refugee status is no longer needed or justified. While the cessation clauses in paragraphs 1 to 4 of Article 1C are linked to a change in an individual’s personal circumstances brought about by the actions of that person, the clauses in 1C (5) and (6) are based on the consideration that international protection is no longer justified due to changes in the country of nationality because the reasons for a person becoming a refugee have ceased to exist.³³ This means the trigger for cessation of status is either based on change in the personal circumstances of refugees or changed circumstances in the country of origin; that is, objectively verifiable facts that are outlined in Article 1C.
16. UNHCR’s interpretation of Article 1C is primarily set out in the UNHCR Handbook and in its Guidelines on International Protection No. 3: Cessation of Refugee Status under Article 1C(5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees (hereafter “UNHCR Cessation Guidelines”).³⁴ As expressed in the Handbook “once a person’s status as a refugee has been determined, it is maintained unless he comes within the terms of one of the cessation clauses.”³⁵

³⁰ United Nations, Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 23 May 1969, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1155, p. 331, www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3a10.html.

³¹ This norm is of particular relevance to interpreting the scope of Article 1C(5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention. See, The 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol, A Commentary, Zimmerman.

³² UNHCR, Guidelines on International Protection No. 3: Cessation of Refugee Status under Article 1C(5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees (hereafter UNHCR Cessation Guidelines), 10 February 2003, HCR/GIP/03/03, www.refworld.org/docid/3e50de6b4.html, para 6.

³³ UNHCR, Handbook; see also ExCom Conclusion No. 69 (XLIII), Cessation of Status (1992).

³⁴ UNHCR, Handbook, paras. 115-116, UNHCR Cessation Guidelines, note 32 above.

³⁵ UNHCR, Handbook, para. 112.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

17. The UNHCR Handbook further provides that “the cessation clauses are negative in character and exhaustively enumerated. The clauses should therefore be interpreted restrictively, and no other reasons may be adduced by way of analogy to justify the withdrawal of refugee status.³⁶ UNHCR underlines in this regard the grave consequences flowing from unjustified or premature declaration of cessation for recognised refugees, including loss of rights that accompany refugee status and further displacement within the country of origin or renewed displacement outside, as well as risks to life and personal security.³⁷ The changes must be of such a nature that the refugee cannot “continue to refuse to avail him [or herself] of the protection of the country of his [her] nationality.”³⁸ This is also consistent with the principles of legal certainty and legitimate expectations,³⁹ as well as Article 18 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU, according to which the right to asylum must be guaranteed with due respect for the rules of the 1951 Convention.
18. The test for cessation under Article 1C (5) and (6) requires an assessment of the extent or degree to which the circumstances, relevant in connection with the granting of refugee status, in the country have changed fundamentally and durably so that the refugee can re-avail her- or himself of the protection of her or his own country. UNHCR’s Cessation Guidelines can assist in the assessment of how and to what extent conditions in the country of origin must have changed before the “ceased circumstances” clauses can be invoked.⁴⁰ The most typical situation of a fundamental change is one where hostilities have ended, and peace and stability have returned to the country.⁴¹ If a particular cause of fear of persecution existed for a refugee, the elimination of this cause is important in assessing whether a fundamental change which would justify the application of the cessation clauses, but all the relevant factors must be taken into consideration as persecution often has multiple and inter-linked causes.⁴² Furthermore, where the particular circumstances leading to flight have changed, only to be replaced by different circumstances which may also give rise to refugee status, Article 1C(5) or (6) cannot be invoked.⁴³

³⁶ UNHCR, Handbook, para. 116. On the ‘negative’ character of the cessation clauses, see also the UNHCR Handbook, para 31, which states: “The inclusion clauses define the criteria that a person must satisfy in order to be a refugee. They form the positive basis upon which the determination of refugee status is made. The so-called cessation and exclusion clauses have a negative significance; the former indicate the conditions under which a refugee ceases to be a refugee...”

³⁷ UNHCR, Note on Cessation Clauses (30 May 1997) (hereafter “Note on Cessation”), paras. 8 and 40.

³⁸ Article 1C(5). See equivalent for stateless refugees in Article 1C(6) referring to the country of habitual residence.

³⁹ UNHCR, Cancellation of Refugee Status, March 2003, PPLA/2003/02, www.refworld.org/docid/3f4de8a74.html, para. 12 and fn 13. The principles of legal certainty and legitimate expectations are also among the fundamental principles of the EU, see for example, CJEU, C-369/09 P, 24 March 2011, <http://curia.europa.eu/juris/liste.jsf?language=en&num=C-369/09%20P>, para. 122.

⁴⁰ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 11.

⁴¹ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 11.

⁴² UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 11. See also UNHCR, Public Statement in Relation to Salahadin Abdulla and Others v. Bundesrepublik Deutschland pending before the Court of Justice of the European Union, August 2008, C-175/08; C-176/08; C-178/08 & C-179/08, www.refworld.org/docid/48a2f0782.html, p. 7.

⁴³ UNHCR Cessation Guidelines, para. 12.

19. UNHCR’s Executive Committee Conclusion No. 69 (XLIII), states:

“[I]n taking any decision on application of the cessation clauses based on “ceased circumstances”, States must carefully assess the fundamental character of the changes in the country of nationality or origin, including the general human rights situation, as well as the particular cause of fear of persecution, in order to make sure in an objective and verifiable way that the situation which justified the granting of refugee status has ceased to exist.

... [A]n essential element in such assessment by States is the fundamental, stable and durable character of the changes, making use of appropriate information available in this respect, inter alia, from relevant specialized bodies, including particularly UNHCR.”⁴⁴

20. For the refugee to be able to effectively re-avail her- or himself of the protection of their own country, such protection must be effective and available and go beyond mere physical security or safety. Such protection needs to include the existence of a functioning government and basic administrative structures, as evidenced for instance through a functioning system of law and justice and the existence of adequate infrastructure to enable residents to exercise their rights, including their right to a basic livelihood, as evidenced by the general human rights situation in the country. Marked progress in establishing an independent judiciary, fair trials and access to courts are among key indications of the availability of effective protection in the country of origin.⁴⁵

21. EU secondary law lays down similar preconditions as clarified by the CJEU in Salahadin Abdulla and Others v. Bundesrepublik Deutschland where the Court held that Article 7 (Actors of protection) of the Qualification Directive imposes an obligation on the competent authorities to verify whether the actor(s) of protection of the third country in question operate, inter alia, an effective legal system for the detection, prosecution and punishment of acts constituting persecution, in addition to assessing the laws and regulations of the country of origin and the manner in which they are applied, and the extent to which basic human rights are guaranteed in that country.⁴⁶ This verification is a broad one, since it involves assessing, in particular, how “the institutions, authorities and security forces” operate, but also “all groups or bodies of the third country which may, by their action or inaction, be responsible for acts of persecution”.⁴⁷ Further, not simply any change of circumstances is relevant, but only such that is “of such a significant and non-temporary nature” that the fear of persecution is “permanently eradicated.”⁴⁸ This absence of a well-founded fear is precisely what is missing in a situation where only parts of the country may be considered safe (see below para. 29).

⁴⁴ ExCom Conclusion No. 69 (XLIII), Cessation of Status (1992).

⁴⁵ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, paras. 15 and 16.

⁴⁶ Salahadin Abdulla and Others v. Bundesrepublik Deutschland, C-175/08; C-176/08; C-178/08 & C-179/08, CJEU, 2 March 2010, [www.refworld.org/cases,E CJ,4b8e6ea22.html](http://www.refworld.org/cases/E CJ,4b8e6ea22.html), paras. 70-71.

⁴⁷ Ibid., para. 71.

⁴⁸ Ibid., paras. 72, 73.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

22. As stated in the Cessation Guidelines:

“UNHCR considers that changes in the refugee’s country of origin affecting only part of the territory should not, in principle, lead to cessation of refugee status. Refugee status can only come to an end if the basis for persecution is removed without the precondition that the refugee has to return to specific safe parts of the country in order to be free from persecution. Also, not being able to move or to establish oneself freely in the country of origin would indicate that the changes have not been fundamental.”⁴⁹

23. The phrase ‘in principle’ does not qualify or affect the need for changes which remove the threat of persecution throughout the whole country, and not merely part, before cessation can apply. UNHCR’s guidance recognizes that in some cases, cessation may only be relevant for some groups of refugees, or for those who have fled at a particular time, and aims to define the limited parameters under which cessation declarations may be made for distinct sub-groups of a general refugee population from a specific country. For instance, for refugees who fled persecution by a particular regime while it was in power, cessation could apply when the regime is no longer in power. This would not apply for those refugees who fled after that regime was deposed. This is distinct from the situation in which a general cessation declaration might be made for all groups in an entire country. A key premise of the guidance is accordingly that no cessation can be undertaken when changes affect only part of the country.

24. Moreover, cessation “should not result in persons being compelled to return to a volatile situation, as this would undermine the likelihood of a durable solution and could also cause additional or renewed instability in an otherwise improving situation, thus risking future refugee flows.”⁵⁰ As noted above, a premature application of the ceased circumstances clauses because of changes occurring in only part of the country would be inconsistent with the purpose of Article 1C (5) and (6) and the object and purpose of 1951 Convention to find durable solutions for refugees.⁵¹

25. Where the cessation clauses are applied on an individual basis, it should not be done for the purposes of a re-hearing de novo or a re-assessment of the refugee’s well-founded fear of persecution.⁵² This would defeat the purpose of the cessation clauses based on “ceased circumstances” under Article 1C (5) and (6) as a distinct test in contrast to the inclusion test under Article 1A(2) of the 1951 Convention. In UNHCR’s view, it would be at variance with the text of Article 1 of the 1951 Convention in the context of the treaty and in light of its object and purpose for a recognized refugee to have to re-assert their claim for inclusion under Article 1A(2).⁵³

⁴⁹ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 17.

⁵⁰ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 6.

⁵¹ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 18, where reference is made to preserving a refugee’s sense of stability and 1951 Convention State Parties’ obligations under Article 34.

⁵² UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 18.

⁵³ Unless grounds for cancellation, revocation or cessation exist. UNHCR, Note on the Cancellation of Refugee Status, 22 November 2004, www.refworld.org/docid/41a5dfd94.html.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

24. Similarly, an approach that applies the ceased circumstances clauses on the basis of changes in the factual circumstances in the country of origin occurring after the cessation decision and removal of the person(s) concerned, risks depriving Article 1C of any practical effect and would be contrary to the 1951 Convention.⁵⁴

Internal flight alternative in the context of cessation

25. UNHCR submits that the IFA concept can be applied only in the context of assessments of eligibility for international protection within Article 1A (2) of the 1951 Convention, and not in the context of cessation of refugee status in accordance with Article 1C (5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention. The possibility of an IFA is part of the holistic test under Article 1A (2) of the 1951 Convention to establish whether a person has a well-founded fear of persecution and is unwilling or unable to avail her- or himself of the protection of her or his country of origin.⁵⁵ In contrast, cessation on the basis of “ceased circumstances” requires an assessment of whether the situation in the country of origin in connection with the reasons for recognizing the person as a refugee has changed fundamentally and durably. Further, IFA is part of a forward-looking test, whereas cessation on the basis of “ceased circumstances” concerns an assessment of the extent or degree to which past circumstances have materially changed.

26. The cessation analysis is not simply the “mirror image” of assessing whether a person has a well-founded fear of persecution and is unwilling or unable to avail her- or himself of the protection of her or his country of origin.⁵⁶ In addition to the absence of a well-founded fear of persecution and the availability of protection in the country of origin, cessation of refugee status requires that such protection is of a fundamental, durable and stable character. As mentioned above, the same is required by the CJEU under Article 11(2) of the Qualification Directive: for the change of circumstances to be of a “significant and non-temporary nature” the factors which formed the basis of the refugee’s fear of persecution must be “permanently eradicated”.⁵⁷

⁵⁴ This finds support in ECtHR case-law insofar as an erroneous application of the cessation clauses at the time of removal amounts to the lack of a close and rigorous scrutiny required by Article 3 ECHR, and that according to the ECtHR, the material time for such scrutiny is the time when the removal took place: see para. 133 of Saadi v. Italy, Appl. No. 37201/06, ECtHR, 28 February 2008, www.refworld.org/cases,ECHR,47c6882e2.html. Furthermore, ECtHR has also established in its jurisprudence, that States’ fulfilment of their obligations under the 1951 Convention is subject to a compatibility review under the ECHR and that Contracting Parties must not deprive refugees of the protection afforded by both Conventions. See Amuur v. France, 17/1995/523/609, ECtHR, 25 June 1996, www.refworld.org/cases,ECHR,3ae6b76710.html.

⁵⁵ UNHCR, IFA Guidelines, para. 3.

⁵⁶ See also Supreme Court of Norway judgment of 23 March 2018, HR-2018-572-A, (case no. 2017/1659), civil case, appeal against judgment: www.domstol.no/globalassets/upload/hret/decisions-in-english-translation/hr-2018-572-a.pdf, where the Supreme Court stated in para. 44 that “the conditions for revoking a refugee status and residence permit pursuant to section 37 subsection 1 e, are not a direct mirroring of the conditions for granting the same pursuant to section 28.”

⁵⁷ Salahadin Abdulla and Others v. Bundesrepublik Deutschland, C-175/08; C-176/08; C-178/08 & C-179/08: CJEU, 2 March 2010, www.refworld.org/cases,EJC,4b8e6ea22.html, para. 73.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

27. Furthermore, for internal protection to be considered under Article 8 QD, there needs to be either (1) no well-founded fear of persecution or serious harm, or (2) access to protection in line with Article 7 QD, in addition to the requirements of relevance and reasonableness outlined above. Access to protection under Article 7(2) QD must be “effective and of a non-temporary nature.” For this purpose, actors of protection must “take reasonable steps to prevent the persecution or suffering of serious harm”, inter alia by “operating an effective legal system.”⁵⁸
28. In addition, the ceased circumstance clause under Article 11(1)(e) QD may only be applied if the “circumstances in connection with which he or she has been recognized as a refugee have ceased to exist.” The “circumstance” that led to granting of refugee status must be understood as the existence of a well-founded fear of persecution, rather than the lack of an IFA. In other words, if it is later considered that an IFA is available, this does not remove the fear of persecution, which is still present for the rest of the country (since the IFA consideration only comes into play when a well-founded fear of persecution is established). The circumstances that led to granting of protection status have thus not changed.
29. UNHCR further submits that refugee status should only be ceased if the basis for persecution is removed without the precondition that the refugee has to return to specific safe parts of the country. As stated above, in UNHCR’s view, “[r]efugee status can only come to an end if the basis for persecution is removed without the precondition that the refugee has to return to specific safe parts of the country in order to be free from persecution. Also, not being able to move or to establish oneself freely in the country of origin would indicate that the changes have not been fundamental.”⁵⁹
30. Thus, where the risk which formed the basis of the grant of international protection persists in his or her home area, cessation should not be applied on the basis that circumstances have changed in another part of the country. Where changes have only occurred in one part of the country, this may be evidence that the changes are not fundamental, durable and stable for the purposes of cessation of refugee status.⁶⁰
31. Furthermore, a change in the individual circumstances of a refugee (such as the reappearance of her male spouse/partner) which could be relevant in the context of an assessment of eligibility for international protection within Article 1A (2), is irrelevant in the context of cessation under Article 1C (5) and (6). UNHCR underlines in this regard that family members cannot be seen to provide “domestic protection” for the purpose of the cessation assessment. Such an interpretation would not only be at variance with the concept of national protection under refugee and human rights law, but would render female refugees reliant on relationships with male relatives for their longer-term safety.

⁵⁸ See also the pending CJEU case in O.A. (C-255/19), <http://curia.europa.eu/juris/liste.jsf?language=en&td=ALL&num=C-255/19> on the issue of actors of protection under Article 7 QD.

⁵⁹ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 17.

⁶⁰ UNHCR, Cessation Guidelines, para. 17.

UNHCR

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees
Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés

32. Finally, applying an IFA in the context of cessation may create internal displacement. UNHCR does not consider the situation of internal displacement as a durable solution.⁶¹

Article 1C (5) and (6) and recognized refugees from Afghanistan

33. UNHCR has extensive experience with regard to assessing changes in conditions in countries of origin, both in the context of determining when it is appropriate to promote voluntary repatriation and the application of the “ceased circumstances” clause.⁶²
34. The armed conflict in Afghanistan is ongoing and continues to result in large numbers of civilian casualties.⁶³ The implementation of a peace agreement signed in February 2020 between the United States and the Taliban has encountered significant obstacles, and both the Taliban and Islamic State continue to carry out attacks against civilians.⁶⁴ Other security threats include criminal networks involved in killings and kidnappings.⁶⁵
35. Moreover, the absorption capacity in terms of infrastructure and housing is even more limited than in 2018.⁶⁶ This is notably due to the population increase since the fall of the Taliban regime and the number of returnees and IDPs. Accordingly, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) has concluded that Kabul is “potentially susceptible to social instability induced by large influxes of returnees and IDPs, who face limited

⁶¹ See Global Consultations on International Protection, Summary Conclusions: Cessation of Refugee Status, June 2003: www.refworld.org/docid/470a33bcd.html, according to which it is inappropriate to import the IFA from refugee status determination in relation to cessation as it raises human rights concerns, most notably the creation or expansion of situations of internal displacement.

⁶² A “ceased circumstances” clause is contained in Article 6(A)(e) of UNHCR’s Statute; supra note 2. On UNHCR’s practice regarding cessation through 1999 see: Joan Fitzpatrick and Rafael Bonoan, “Cessation of Refugee Protection”, in E. Feller, V. Turk and Frances Nicholson (eds), Refugee Protection in International Law, Cambridge (2003), www.unhcr.org/refworld/docid/470a33bc0.html, p. 502. Since 1999, the ceased circumstances clause has been invoked by UNHCR in four cases: Eritrea (for specific groups), Timor Leste, Tajikistan and Sierra Leone. Since 1973, UNHCR has found it appropriate to invoke the “ceased circumstances” clause on 25 occasions.

⁶³ UNAMA, Afghanistan: Annual Report on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict 2019, February 2020, www.ecoi.net/en/document/2025015.html.

⁶⁴ Voice of America, Kabul Criticizes Taliban for Rejecting Government Teams for Peace Talks, 29 March 2020, <https://www.voanews.com/south-central-asia/kabul-criticizes-taliban-rejecting-government-teams-peace-talks>; International Crisis Group, What Will Happen if the U.S. Military Pulls Out of Afghanistan Without a Peace Deal?, 26 March 2020, www.crisisgroup.org/asia/south-asia/afghanistan/what-will-happen-if-us-military-pulls-out-afghanistan-without-peace-deal.

⁶⁵ UNAMA, Afghanistan: Annual Report on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict 2019, February 2020, www.ecoi.net/en/document/2025015.html, p. 50; Afghanistan Analysts Network, Kabul’s Expanding Crime Scene (Part 2): Criminal Activities and the Police Response, 21 February 2020, www.afghanistan-analysts.org/en/reports/economy-development-environment/kabuls-expanding-crime-scene-part-2-criminal-activities-and-the-police-response/; Inside over, Child Kidnapping in Kabul on the Rise, 11 July 2019, www.insideover.com/society/child-kidnapping-in-kabul-on-the-rise.html; The Diplomat, Afghanistan’s Other War, 4 June 2019, <https://thediplomat.com/2019/06/afghanistans-other-war/>; France 24, Never Mind the War: Kabul Residents Fear Surge in Violent Crime, 22 May 2019, www.france24.com/en/20190522-never-mind-war-kabul-residents-fear-surge-violent-crime.

⁶⁶ UNHCR, Afghanistan: Compilation of Country of Origin Information (COI) Relevant for Assessing the Availability of an Internal Flight, Relocation or Protection Alternative (IFA/IRA/IPA) to Kabul, December 2019, www.refworld.org/docid/5def56204.html.

access to basic services and livelihoods, jeopardizing reintegration prospects and fueling secondary displacement.”⁶⁷

36. UNHCR, therefore, considers that the conditions for the application of Article 1C (5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention with respect to recognized refugees from Afghanistan are not met. UNHCR’s position, established in UNHCR Eligibility Guidelines for Assessing the International Protection needs of asylum-seekers from Afghanistan of August 2018, that the current situation in Afghanistan does not warrant cessation of refugee status on the basis of Article 1C(5) of the 1951 Convention thus continues to be valid.⁶⁸

III. Conclusions

37. In conclusion, UNHCR submits that the consideration of a possible IFA belongs in the inclusion assessment and is a forward-looking test to be assessed at the time of original recognition of refugee status. The consideration requires an assessment of the relevance as well as the reasonableness of the proposed IFA.

38. The cessation clauses leave no room for an IFA assessment. The cessation clauses are negative in character and exhaustively enumerated. Any other reasons adduced by way of analogy to justify the withdrawal of refugee status run contrary to the purpose of the 1951 Convention. There is nothing in the preparatory works to the 1951 Convention to suggest that refugee status was meant to be ceased based on an improvement that is only local or indeed confined to a particular city or town or other smaller area. The Convention indeed refers to protection in the country of nationality, and contains no language such as protection in parts of the country of nationality.

39. The cessation test and the IFA test are two different tests with two distinct purposes. A crucial aspect in determining whether circumstances have changed so as to justify cessation under Article 1C(5) or (6) is whether a refugee can effectively re-avail him or herself of the protection of the country of origin. Such protection must be effective and available and requires more than mere physical security or safety as the threshold for cessation is higher than for non-inclusion.

40. In view of prevalent human rights violations in Afghanistan, it cannot be said that ‘fundamental, stable and durable’ changes have taken place. Hence, UNHCR considers it premature to justify the application of Article 1C(5) and (6) of the 1951 Convention with respect to recognized refugees from Afghanistan as the prerequisites for applying the cessation clauses have not been met.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

UNHCR
10 April 2020

⁶⁷ IOM, Afghanistan: Baseline Mobility Assessment – Summary Results, Round 8, Mar – Jun 2019, 15 October 2019, <https://bit.ly/2Csjqak>, p. 6.

⁶⁸ UNHCR, Eligibility Guidelines for Assessing the International Protection Needs of Asylum-Seekers from Afghanistan, 30 August 2018, www.refworld.org/docid/5b8900109.html.