Agenda item 6

Universal periodic review

Report of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review*

Burundi

* The annex is being circulated without formal editing, in the languages of submission only.

Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-ninth session from 15 to 26 January 2018. The review of Burundi was held at the 7th meeting, on 18 January 2018. The delegation of Burundi was headed by the minister responsible for the rights of the person, social affairs and gender, Martin Nivyabandi. At its 14th meeting, held on 23 January 2018, the Working Group adopted the report on Burundi.
2. On 10 January 2018, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Burundi: Côte d'Ivoire, Germany and Saudi Arabia.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Burundi:
 - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/29/BDI/1);
 - (b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/29/BDI/2 and Corr.1);
 - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/29/BDI/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, Brazil, Czechia, Germany, Portugal, Slovenia, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America was transmitted to Burundi through the troika. These questions are available on the website of the universal periodic review.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The head of the Burundian delegation expressed his country's pride at renewing its participation in the universal periodic review. The review was taking place just as Burundi was arriving at a decisive turning point in its history: the holding of a referendum on a new Constitution, with the ultimate aim of embedding and sustaining institutional stability and social cohesion in the country. The national report of Burundi was based primarily on the recommendations that had emerged during the second cycle of the review.
6. Burundi had pursued clear legislative reforms with a view to promoting and protecting human rights. The President of the Republic had promulgated several Acts, covering the current Code of Criminal Procedure; the regulation of public meetings and demonstrations; the Electoral Code; the establishment of the Special Land and Property Court; the punishment of trafficking in persons and protection of its victims; the protection of victims, witnesses and other persons at risk; the prevention and punishment of gender-based violence and protection of its victims; press regulation; and a legal framework for non-profit organizations.
7. On the institutional front, a framework for civic dialogue had been established in September 2015 with the creation of the National Commission for Dialogue among Burundians, which had recently submitted its final report on the consultations held throughout the country. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission was operational and its branches had already carried out fieldwork so that the people of Burundi might engage in reflection and embrace a brighter future. All of society was committed to reconciliation and everything had been done to preserve unity.
8. Since its review during the second cycle, Burundi had ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto. Burundi had held constructive dialogues with several treaty bodies, including the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

9. Concrete steps had been taken to improve the protection of children by establishing specialized juvenile chambers in regional courts. A telephone helpline that allowed children to report abuse was being piloted in Bujumbura with a view to being extended across the country and two rehabilitation centres for juveniles in conflict with the law had started activities. The National Children's Forum had been set up to provide a framework for consultations between the Government and children, while local-level child protection committees reported all cases of violations to the Government.

10. To relieve prison overcrowding, presidential pardons were granted regularly and the courts were expected to process cases swiftly. The prison service had established women's and girls' quarters in places of detention in order to ensure their dignity and protection.

11. Regarding girls' education, Burundi had made efforts to eliminate the discrimination arising from traditional attitudes, in particular by identifying girls who did not go to school or had dropped out of school and enrolling them in State schools. The duration of free primary education, which now included an introduction to entrepreneurship, had been extended to nine years in order to keep girls in school for longer and to gradually attain parity between girls and boys in secondary education.

12. Burundi was pursuing the "zero-tolerance" policy towards gender-based violence initiated by the President of the Republic. In addition to the pilot centre set up in 2012, new comprehensive care facilities had recently been established in three provinces. The current law on gender violence was bearing fruit and all actors were actively combating gender violence on the ground.

13. The Government had recently launched an extensive social safety net programme to reduce chronic poverty and was carrying out information, communication and education measures to encourage positive behaviours conducive to the improvement of nutrition, early childhood development, school attendance and financial literacy.

14. Recent steps to consolidate national human rights institutions included the establishment of the National Council for National Unity and Reconciliation and the National Observatory for the Prevention and Eradication of Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity. The Government was currently finalizing its National Development Plan 2018–2027, a strategic guidance tool that ought to contribute effectively and constructively to increasing gross domestic product. The Government had set itself the goal of structurally transforming the economy to achieve strong, sustainable and inclusive growth.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

15. During the interactive dialogue, 96 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

16. Finland noted with concern the deterioration of the human rights situation in Burundi and the authorities' acts against human rights defenders. It emphasized the importance of full cooperation with the United Nations and the Commission of Inquiry on Burundi.

17. France, while noting positively the ratification of two conventions, expressed concern about the serious deterioration of the human rights situation since 2015.

18. Georgia called on Burundi to cooperate with the Commission of Inquiry and ensure unhindered access by United Nations entities, including OHCHR.

19. Germany made recommendations.

20. Greece made recommendations.

21. Haiti took note of the efforts made by Burundi, despite the recent challenges, to improve the living conditions of the population.
22. Honduras congratulated Burundi for adopting a law on equal opportunities for persons with disabilities that envisioned inclusive education measures.
23. Hungary expressed deep concern about endemic impunity and human rights violations, including summary executions, torture, enforced disappearance, arbitrary detention and sexual violence.
24. Iceland expressed grave concern about the human rights situation in Burundi.
25. India expressed appreciation for the State's ratification of several international human rights instruments and their incorporation into national law, and its adoption of the action plan relating to the gender policy.
26. Indonesia expressed appreciation for the ratification of international human rights instruments and cooperation with the treaty bodies.
27. The Islamic Republic of Iran welcomed the law on the prevention of trafficking in persons, the amendment of the Act on the Criminal Procedure Code, and the establishment of the social protection fund.
28. Ireland expressed deep concern about reports of extrajudicial executions, arbitrary arrests and detentions, enforced disappearances, torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and sexual violence perpetrated since 2015.
29. Italy expressed grave concern about the human rights situation in Burundi.
30. Belgium, while welcoming some achievements, expressed worry about the human rights situation, in particular the plight of human rights defenders and journalists.
31. Latvia welcomed the extension of a standing invitation to all special procedures, while expressing regret that a number of visit requests had not been accepted.
32. Libya commended Burundi for ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.
33. Liechtenstein expressed concern that the independence of the National Independent Human Rights Commission might be jeopardized. It also expressed concern about the exacerbation of violence, particularly against women, and the withdrawal from the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.
34. Madagascar welcomed the measures taken to promote and protect human rights, including the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the National Commission for the Inter-Burundian Dialogue.
35. Malaysia welcomed the commitment of Burundi to improve socioeconomic development, as well as the State's efforts to promote gender equality and address gender-based violence.
36. Maldives welcomed the adoption of laws on the prevention and suppression of human trafficking and the protection of victims of trafficking, and the establishment of a related national committee.
37. Mauritania encouraged Burundi to continue efforts to strengthen the participation of women in public life and to take all measures necessary to strengthen the independence of justice.
38. Mexico noted the adoption of a national strategy to combat gender violence.
39. Montenegro expressed concern about widespread use of torture, unlawful detention and extrajudicial killings, and about numerous attacks and acts of intimidation against opposition and civil society members, human rights defenders and journalists.
40. Nepal expressed appreciation for the State's serious efforts to improve socioeconomic conditions and protect human rights. It encouraged Burundi to cooperate with OHCHR and international human rights mechanisms.

41. The Netherlands expressed serious concern about the general lack of progress on human rights, including with respect to the continuing shrinkage of space for media and the rising hostility towards, and intimidation of, journalists.
42. New Zealand welcomed the new law targeting sexual violence.
43. Norway was gravely concerned about the rampant human rights violations in Burundi.
44. Pakistan welcomed, inter alia, political measures on legal aid, the gender units of various ministries, and the special courts for juveniles and for gender-based violence.
45. Poland welcomed the law on human trafficking and the respective national action plan. It expressed concern about the State's withdrawal from the Rome Statute and the suspension of its cooperation with OHCHR.
46. Portugal welcomed efforts to promote gender equality. It expressed regret that Burundi had withdrawn from the Rome Statute, and expressed concern about reports of human rights violations.
47. The Republic of Korea expressed concern about the recent civil and political situation in Burundi, which jeopardized the rule of law, about the suspension of cooperation with OHCHR and about the detention of returnees.
48. The Republic of Moldova expressed regret about the suspended cooperation with OHCHR and the rejection of mechanisms of the Human Rights Council. It expressed concern about the exacerbation of violence against women, including sexual violence.
49. The Russian Federation welcomed steps to ensure the realization of economic and social rights, to adopt legislation banning the use of torture, to reform education and to raise awareness of discrimination against persons with albinism.
50. Rwanda remained gravely concerned at the deterioration in the human rights situation. It called on Burundi to investigate gross and systematic human rights violations and restore cooperation with the United Nations mechanisms.
51. Senegal welcomed the ratification of international instruments, the adoption of legislation on human trafficking and the revision of the labour code aimed at reinforcing the rights of women at work.
52. Sierra Leone applauded the measures taken to raise awareness of and support persons with albinism. It encouraged Burundi to establish a mechanism to hold accountable those accused of crimes against humanity.
53. Slovenia remained concerned about the overall human rights situation, and encouraged Burundi to extend to OHCHR the commitment it had demonstrated under the universal periodic review process.
54. South Africa commended the State's efforts to prevent trafficking in persons and gender-based violence, to train judges and police officers to prevent torture, and to reduce the number of young people in detention.
55. Spain made recommendations.
56. Sri Lanka welcomed efforts to ratify international instruments and implement the national gender policy action plan covering the period from 2012 to 2016.
57. The head of the Burundian delegation stated that the situation in his country had improved noticeably since 2015. In respect of the concerns expressed about the protection of human rights defenders, he said that such persons were not considered a distinct category and that they were not prosecuted because of their status. If they committed offences, they were punished in the same way as any other person. The judiciary had asked some defenders to explain themselves on account of their participation in the insurrectional movement and the attempted coup d'état of 2015. Some media outlets, on the other hand, remained closed because the people in charge of them had refused to cooperate with the judiciary. New radio stations had begun broadcasting and there were now a total of 25 stations that respected professional ethics.

58. Regarding cooperation with OHCHR, the Government had held frequent meetings with that entity with a view to reaching an agreement in the interests of all, allowing OHCHR to contribute to the strengthening of human rights in cooperation with national institutions and civil society organizations. Many of the 6,000-plus associations registered by the Ministry of the Interior and Patriotic Training were working to protect human rights.

59. Burundi had invoked its prerogative of sovereignty in withdrawing from the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. Having thoroughly analysed the situation, the Government had concluded that withdrawal from the Statute would neither jeopardize the independence of the judiciary nor prevent the prosecution of crimes at the national level, since the crimes in question were provided for under domestic legislation. The Government had committed to addressing such crimes.

60. Regarding the mobilization of resources, Burundi was a low-income country which nevertheless had great potential. The Government had asked its various partners to reconsider the positions they had taken regarding the imposition of sanctions. Burundi was undertaking good governance efforts in order to attain budgetary independence. Despite difficulties, the Government had continued to deliver a programme of free health care for children under 5 and pregnant women and a programme of free primary education.

61. Persons with disabilities were a priority for the Government. A law on the status of persons with disabilities, developed in cooperation with associations, had been adopted to improve the situation of all persons with disabilities.

62. The achievement of gender parity in the Government depended on education, so that it was necessary to promote education in order to gradually achieve that goal. Parity had been established in primary education and had almost been achieved in secondary education, while efforts were being made to ensure that women were better represented in higher education. Following the conclusion of the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, a minimum proportion of 30 per cent had been set for women's participation in elective institutions and in the Government.

63. Many laws existed to combat impunity. The right to equitable justice was guaranteed under the Constitution. Notwithstanding limited resources, everything was done so that Burundians could have access to legal assistance.

64. Burundi had ratified the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others and the Government was working to ensure that no Burundian would fall victim to trafficking, including by concluding agreements with several countries.

65. The Government had made a great effort to protect the rights of the Batwa. That community was represented in the National Assembly and the Senate, as well as in the Ministry of Human Rights, Social Affairs and Gender to ensure the gradual integration of its members into the executive branch.

66. On the issue of stateless persons, the Nationality Act of 2000 was clear: any person born in Burundi was a Burundian. A National Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons had been established to handle any and all cases of statelessness.

67. The Independent National Human Rights Commission enjoyed A status in respect of the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles), which confirmed the Commission's independence.

68. Early and forced marriages were not a concern for Burundi, since on that issue the country's Family Code was extremely clear. The Government continued to actively support the global eradication of the phenomenon.

69. The State of Palestine encouraged Burundi to reassess its decision on ending its relations with OHCHR, and explore the possibility of reaching an agreement with the latter.

70. The Sudan welcomed the ratification of international human rights instruments and the measures taken in the field of education.

71. Sweden made recommendations.

72. Switzerland expressed worry about the serious deterioration of the human rights situation in Burundi, and recalled the importance of free participation by civil society in the universal periodic review process.
73. The Syrian Arab Republic commended the support given to human rights institutions, including the National Independent Human Rights Commission and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.
74. Thailand welcomed the legislation on gender-based violence and the establishment of centres focused on gender-based violence, special court chambers and regional offices of the National Independent Human Rights Commission.
75. Timor-Leste welcomed the national action plan to implement Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) on women, peace and security, the revision of the Labour Code in support of women's rights and the prioritization of gender equality in combating poverty.
76. Togo welcomed legislative efforts in preventing human trafficking and gender-based violence, and encouraged Burundi to pay particular attention to those most vulnerable.
77. Tunisia noted with satisfaction the adoption of the law aimed at protecting women from violence, and encouraged Burundi to continue its efforts to strengthen the rule of law.
78. Turkmenistan noted positively the ratification of human rights instruments, and the implementation of gender-related national action plans, which had led to the reduction of cases of gender-based violence.
79. Ukraine expressed concern about continued reports of human rights violations and the lack of action to fight impunity. It deeply regretted the suspension of all cooperation with OHCHR.
80. The United Kingdom remained extremely concerned by the Commission of Inquiry's findings on the issue of crimes against humanity. It strongly objected to acts of reprisal or intimidation committed against human rights defenders, including in relation to the universal periodic review process.
81. The United States was extremely concerned by the serious human rights violations and abuses and the impunity in which they were committed, and the continued restrictions on political and civic space for various actors.
82. Uruguay expressed hope that some of the adopted initiatives would contribute to combating gender-based violence and inequality. It noted the vulnerability of some minorities. It urged Burundi to ratify the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty.
83. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela welcomed the increased political representation of women, the law on preventing gender-based violence and protecting victims, and the housing and urbanization policy.
84. Zambia was concerned about the number of women detained with young children, and the lack of social care or protection for children separated from their detained mothers.
85. Afghanistan welcomed the implementation of the law on punishment of gender-based violence, and the establishment of gender units in ministries and special court chambers for young people and for cases of gender-based violence.
86. Albania stated that, especially since 2015, Burundi had been facing ongoing challenges connected to persistent violence, and expressed disappointment about the plight of human rights defenders.
87. Algeria noted positively that gender equality was among the main priorities in the framework of the poverty reduction strategy, and welcomed the measures taken in support of vulnerable persons.
88. Angola stated that Burundi had implemented recommendations accepted during the second cycle of the review by ratifying some international instruments, while noting that it still faced many challenges in guaranteeing the enjoyment of human rights.

89. Argentina expressed concern about the human rights violations committed in Burundi.
90. Australia remained concerned about ongoing disappearances, arbitrary arrests, torture, extrajudicial executions, sexual violence and the “official hunt” for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons.
91. Austria, while noting some positive measures, remained deeply concerned about persisting serious human rights violations in Burundi, including arbitrary arrests and detention, enforced disappearances, extrajudicial executions, torture and sexual violence.
92. Azerbaijan acknowledged the progress made, including the ratification of international instruments. It welcomed efforts in combating gender-based violence, and ensuring the rights to health and to education.
93. Bahrain encouraged Burundi to strengthen its national mechanism for reporting and follow-up in relation to international and regional human rights mechanisms and treaty obligations, with a particular focus on discrimination against women.
94. Belarus noted the State’s cooperation with treaty bodies, and stated that its efforts to strengthen security and enhance economic growth and development should be supported by the international community.
95. Japan, while welcoming the increased level of women’s participation in political life, expressed concern about the forcible displacement of about 400,000 Burundians to neighbouring countries, as at August 2017.
96. Benin welcomed the legislative reforms aimed at protecting women and children from violence and trafficking. It urged the international community to support Burundi in strengthening peace and security and promoting economic social development.
97. The Plurinational State of Bolivia welcomed the legal progress and prioritization of gender equality in combating poverty. It encouraged further efforts to ensure women’s access to land, to promote peace and to end violence.
98. Botswana noted the State’s efforts to promote and protect human rights, including in the area of gender-based violence. It raised concerns about the suspension of cooperation with OHCHR.
99. Brazil noted the measures taken to ensure food security and to fight hunger, and welcomed the progress made in combating HIV/AIDS.
100. Canada stated that all persons in Burundi, including human rights defenders, should be able to fully exercise their freedoms of expression, association and assembly, and to have confidence that impunity for serious crimes would cease to prevail.
101. Chad encouraged Burundi to continue implementing gender-related national action plans, and welcomed the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the ratification of international instruments.
102. Chile was concerned about the overall human rights situation and the suspension of cooperation with OHCHR and the Commission of Inquiry. It expressed alarm at the plight of human rights defenders.
103. China commended Burundi for the progress made in several areas. It called on the international community to evaluate the State’s positive efforts objectively, and to provide Burundi with constructive assistance.
104. Costa Rica invited Burundi to continue its work to reduce impunity and violence. It urged Burundi to reconsider its withdrawal from the Rome Statute and its suspension of cooperation with OHCHR.
105. Côte d’Ivoire welcomed the legislative and administrative reforms undertaken to promote and protect human rights. It encouraged Burundi to continue its efforts towards national reconciliation and social cohesion.

106. Croatia urged Burundi to review its policy of refusing to cooperate with the Commission of Inquiry and to cease threatening its members. It expressed concern about various human rights violations committed in the country.
107. Cuba noted measures related to health care for children and women, free primary education, and education for girls, including the strategy on gender equality in education and its action plan.
108. Cyprus, while noting the ratification of two international instruments, expressed deep concern about the grave human rights situation that had prevailed since 2015, as documented, most notably, by the Commission of Inquiry.
109. Czechia expressed appreciation for the State's presentation, which gave an overview of the human rights situation in the country.
110. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea welcomed the adoption of a number of legislative measures, the strengthening of the institutional framework and the ratification of international instruments.
111. Denmark was extremely concerned by the State's withdrawal from the International Criminal Court, its opposition to the Court's investigation and its suspension of cooperation with OHCHR and the Commission of Inquiry.
112. Ecuador congratulated Burundi for the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto.
113. Egypt welcomed the State's efforts to promote human rights, the consolidation of structures to protect human rights and the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.
114. Estonia called on Burundi to cooperate with international human rights monitoring mechanisms and allow them unimpeded access to its territory, and to continue cooperation with the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court.
115. Ethiopia commended Burundi for the progress made at the normative and institutional levels, including in relation to the realization of the right to education.
116. Morocco noted measures taken to strengthen the legal framework, such as the adoption of the Act on the prevention and punishment of gender-based violence and protection of its victims, among others.
117. The Holy See noted efforts to improve the education system, while expressing concern about the massive number of refugees from Burundi living outside the country, many in deplorable conditions.
118. Ghana welcomed the promulgation of several laws aimed at promoting and protecting human rights, and the ratification of international instruments.
119. Myanmar welcomed the measures taken to promote education for girls and the inclusion of gender equity in the 2012 education strategy, as well as efforts to improve health-care services.
120. Namibia expressed concern about the circumstances surrounding the current relations between Burundi and OHCHR. It took note of the positive legislative developments since the previous review.
121. Gabon noted the State's efforts to ensure the promotion and protection of human rights by strengthening the legal and institutional framework, and encouraged it to pursue further efforts.
122. Burkina Faso noted some achievements, and encouraged Burundi to intensify its efforts in several areas, including national reconciliation and cooperation with the Human Rights Council and all its mechanisms.
123. Mozambique noted the ratification of various conventions. It welcomed the reports submitted to three treaty bodies, and the strengthening of the institutional framework.

124. The head of the Burundian delegation, in response to references to the arrests of persons, pointed out that the domestic justice system had been inherited from the colonial period. Improvements had been made in the wake of national consultations and had led to the amendment of the Constitution.

125. He emphasized that acts of torture had been categorized as offences under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The prosecuting authorities conducted investigations and offenders were punished in accordance with the law on the basis of evidence.

126. With regard to climate change, Burundi had actively participated in the efforts that had led to the Paris Agreement. Environmentally friendly measures, such as banning non-biodegradable products, would be adopted.

127. A steering committee had been set up to tackle the issue of malnutrition, especially to help children and pregnant women.

128. Members of the Imbonerakure — the youth league of the ruling party — who committed offences were punished individually. Similarly, any misconduct by police officers or members of the military was punished individually. One hundred and fifty cases had been identified and 120 officers had been dismissed.

129. Regarding the prison system, steps had been taken to improve the situation of pregnant and breastfeeding women to avoid placing them in pretrial detention, except in serious cases.

130. The head of delegation recalled that Burundi did not recognize same-sex relationships.

131. Between August and October 2017, 7,011 people had been repatriated and 13,229 had been repatriated from Tanzania with assistance from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. There had been 163,541 cases of spontaneous repatriation. Following repatriation, returnees received assistance from the Government. Efforts were being made to persuade all those who had left the country to return .

132. The head of delegation expressed support for the standing invitation to special procedures mandate holders, of course within the bounds of legality. He ruled out any cooperation with the experts of the Commission of Inquiry on Burundi, as he considered that its mandate was illegal and that it was a political instrument.

133. In respect of the national gender policy, Burundi was working to draw up a dedicated action plan, considering that it was an important issue.

134. Exiles would be able to take part in forthcoming elections by registering with the diplomatic missions in the countries where they lived.

135. The Government had dealt with corruption in the justice system as a matter of priority. Judges and prosecutors who were accused of corruption were punished in accordance with the law. That approach fell under the scope of the national good governance and anti-corruption strategy.

136. The head of the delegation concluded by thanking the many delegations that had made recommendations and offered encouragements to his country. Burundi remained firmly committed to the protection of human rights and would always accept cooperation, but not paternalism, in that sphere. The recommendations that were accepted would be dealt with by an interministerial follow-up mechanism and by a dedicated department of the Ministry of Human Rights, Social Affairs and Gender.
