Report of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

Summary

The present report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance is submitted to the General Assembly pursuant to its resolution 70/139 on combating glorification of Nazism, neo-Nazism and other practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and to resolution 70/140. In resolution 70/139, the Assembly requested the Special Rapporteur to prepare a report on the implementation of the resolution, based on views collected from Governments and non-governmental organizations, for submission at its seventy-first session.

The report contains a brief introduction to the content of resolution 70/139, a summary of the contributions sent by 11 Member States on the implementation of the resolution, including the views of non-governmental and other organizations pertaining to the resolution, and a number of conclusions and recommendations.

I. Introduction

1. The present report of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance is submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 70/139, entitled “Combating glorification of Nazism, neo-Nazism and other practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance”, and to Assembly resolution 70/140.

2. Concerned by the spread of extremist political parties, movements and groups in many parts of the world, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups and similar extremist ideological movements, which has led to an increasing number of acts of racially based violence and mounting hate speech in the public sphere, as previously reported by the Special Rapporteur (see A/HRC/32/49 and A/70/321), the General Assembly recalled, in its resolution 70/139, the request of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 2005/5, that the Special Rapporteur continue to reflect on this issue, make relevant recommendations in his future reports and seek and take into account the views of Governments and non-governmental organizations. In the same resolution, the Assembly also requested the Special Rapporteur to prepare, for submission at its seventy-first session and for submission to the Human Rights Council at its thirty-second session, reports on the implementation of the resolution based on the views collected in accordance with the above-mentioned request of the Commission on Human Rights.

3. In its resolution 70/139, the General Assembly emphasized the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur that “any commemorative celebration of the Nazi regime, its allies and related organizations, whether official or unofficial, should be prohibited by States”, and stressed that it is important that States take measures, in accordance with international human rights law, to counteract any celebration of the Nazi SS organization and all its integral parts, including the Waffen SS. The Assembly also expressed concern about recurring attempts to desecrate or demolish monuments erected in remembrance of those who fought against Nazism during the Second World War, as well as to unlawfully exhume or remove the remains of such persons, and urged States to fully comply with their relevant obligations, inter alia, under article 34 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949.

4. In the same resolution the General Assembly also noted with concern the increase in the number of racist incidents worldwide, including the rise of skinhead groups, which have been responsible for many of these incidents, as well as the resurgence of racist and xenophobic violence targeting, inter alia, persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities. The Assembly also condemned without reservation any denial or attempt to deny the Holocaust, welcomed the call of the Special Rapporteur for the active preservation of those Holocaust sites that served as Nazi death camps, concentration and forced labour camps and prisons, as well as his encouragement of States to take measures, including legislative, law enforcement and educational measures, to put an end to all forms of Holocaust denial and called upon States to continue to take adequate steps, including through national legislation, in accordance with international human rights law, aimed at the prevention of hate speech and incitement to violence against persons belonging to vulnerable groups.

5. In accordance with the practice established in previous reports, the Special Rapporteur presents herein a summary of the information received on relevant activities undertaken by Member States pursuant to General Assembly resolution 70/139. In preparing the report, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) sent a note verbale on 15 March 2016 to Member States and a letter to non-governmental organizations requesting information on the implementation of the resolution. By 30 June 2016, replies had been received from Argentina, Cuba, Germany, Italy, Kuwait, Morocco, Paraguay, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal and Trinidad and Tobago. The Special Rapporteur also received submissions from the World Veterans Federation, the Organization of the Jews in Bulgaria, the Latvian Anti-Nazi Committee and the Latvian Human Rights Committee.<sup>1</sup> The Special Rapporteur wishes to thank all those who contributed information for the present report, and regrets not being able to consider submissions received after 30 June 2016.

6. The information received is summarized herein, as requested in paragraph 43 of resolution 70/139.

II. Contributions received from Member States

A. Argentina

7. The Government of Argentina made reference to several initiatives undertaken to combat the glorification of Nazism, neo-Nazism and other practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including the role of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights and the National Institute to Combat Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism, particularly their efforts in implementing the National Plan against Discrimination.

8. The Government highlighted the various activities carried out by the National Institute to Combat against Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism to accomplish its task, in particular the work of the Interculturalism Unit of the Directorate for the Promotion and Development of Anti-Discrimination Practices. The Unit, which was established in 2011, deals with the specific issue of racial discrimination against groups whose identities are fundamentally shaped by a shared ethnicity, nation, tradition, religion, language or territorial origin. The Government stressed that the focus on interculturalism is a way of reformulating the destructive and hierarchical relations inherent in Nazism, neo-Nazism, xenophobia and racial discrimination.

9. The Government stressed the importance of digital media as a specific area for regulation because it can be used to disseminate racism, xenophobic and intolerant discourse. As a consequence, the “platform for an Internet free from discrimination” was designed to monitor and guarantee the open use of the Internet. With regard to the detection of signs of racism, Nazism, neo-Nazism and xenophobia on the Internet, the virtual platform works with the Web Observatory to find timely solutions in order to ensure that anti-Semitic content is removed from the Internet.

10. The Government mentioned the establishment by the National Institute to Combat Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism of a complaints centre where individuals and organizations can lodge complaints about any kind of discrimination. For example, a case of anti-Semitic chants during a football match led to the sanctioning of an Argentinian football club. Another case concerned the rise in neo-Nazi incidents in Mar del Plata, Buenos Aires Province, where the community has been the target of neo-Nazi and homophobic incidents over the past year. A centre for receiving complaints and assisting victims of acts of xenophobia and racism has been opened in Mar del Plata to address the rise in this type of incident.

11. The Government drew attention to the fact that, while the spread of Nazism, neo-Nazism and contemporary forms of racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance within civil society has slowed down at the national level, such attitudes and ideologies are taken seriously by governmental institutions.

B. Cuba

12. The Government of Cuba informed the Special Rapporteur that it considers it vital to establish, at the national level, the political, legal, economic and social foundations to successfully address all the aforementioned manifestations of xenophobia and racism. In Cuba, constitutional recognition of the principle of equality and the adoption of legislative measures designed to eliminate racial discrimination and to uphold the prohibition of discrimination of all forms have been given priority.

13. The Government stressed that, historically, xenophobia has not existed as a social phenomenon in Cuba. The Government noted with concern that in many regions and countries of the world, and particularly in countries of the industrialized North, racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia continue to exist, including in new and more sophisticated forms. Their persistence is reflected by the continuing formation of associations and political parties with a racist agenda; the erection of monuments and the organization of public demonstrations to glorify the Nazi past and neo-Nazism; attempts to defile or destroy memorials to those who fought against Nazism; the social exclusion and marginalization of peoples, ethnic groups, minorities and other social groups and categories of individuals; the proliferation of discriminatory migration policies and laws; and the adoption of anti-terrorism legislation that offers considerable leeway for arbitrary action and the exercise of public authority on a discriminatory, racist and xenophobic basis.

14. The Government highlighted that Cuba firmly believes that the persistence and resurgence of neo-Nazism, neo-Fascism and other violent nationalist ideologies based on racial and national prejudice should be condemned at the international level and cannot be justified using manipulative and selective arguments related to the exercise of the right to peaceful assembly and association and the right to freedom of opinion and expression.

15. The Government reiterated its resolve to support efforts to ensure the full implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and the adoption of new practical measures to eradicate contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination and intolerance.

16. The Government reported that Cuba has worked around the world to provide services in the fields of health, education and sport in order to allow access to fundamental human rights for millions of impoverished persons, indigenous and Afro-descendent communities and members of other vulnerable social groups.

C. Germany

17. The Government of Germany stressed that it is the responsibility of Governments and civil society to combat racism and other forms of discrimination, including condemnation of any forms of glorification of Nazism, neo-Nazism and other practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. The Government stressed that, considering the responsibility of past history, it is particularly committed to this challenge.

18. The Government underlined that combating racism is a top priority on the Government's agenda but that it cannot solve the problem on its own. Therefore, it highlighted examples of cooperation with civil society, including the creation of the "Forum against Racism", which comprises a wide range of civil society representatives.

19. The Government stressed that the fight against all kinds of stereotypes through educational and general awareness programmes is key to combating racism. In this regard, the Government mentioned several initiatives such as the "Cohesion through participation" programme; the Federal Agency for Civic Education; and the Alliance for Democracy and Tolerance. The Government also reported that educational visits to memorial sites and institutions dedicated to preserving the memory of the crimes committed during the Nazi period are common in schools throughout Germany.

20. The Government indicated that the protection of human rights in general and the prohibition of discriminatory practices in particular form part of the training of police officers. Police officers receive courses dealing with xenophobia and racism. Section 130 of the German Criminal Code states that whoever approves of, denies or downplays crimes committed under Nazi rule is liable to imprisonment of up to five years. Similarly, violating the dignity of the victims of Nazi rule by approving of, glorifying or justifying crimes committed under Nazi rule can be punished with imprisonment of up to three years. The Government also reported that offences involving discrimination against persons are separately recorded and analysed as hate crimes, and that courts generally hand out stricter sentences if a crime is motivated by hatred.

21. The Government highlighted the recent establishment, in coordination with several civil society organizations and companies, including Facebook, Google and Twitter, of a task force to combat hate speech on the Internet. The Government also reported that it strongly supports the work of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) in the fight against intolerance and hate crimes.

D. Italy

22. The Government of Italy referred to its legislative decree of 1 January 2016, under which public insult now amounts to an aggravating circumstance. The Government also reported that the National Office against Racial Discrimination has addressed each practice that contributes to fuelling racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in the triennial National Plan of Action against Racism and Xenophobia adopted in September 2015.

23. The Government highlighted the creation of the Media and Social Network Observatory on hate speech in January 2016, which is focused on reporting hate speech posted online and also at analysing, learning about and understanding the issue. Thousands of online posts are analysed on a day-by-day basis, and a substantial portion of the posts are catalogued and included in thematic reports. Others, a lesser proportion but considered to be of a strongly discriminatory nature, are reported to social networks for removal or to law enforcement for investigation and prosecution.

24. The Government pointed out the holding of a three-day training workshop for law enforcement agencies organized by the Observatory for Security against Discriminatory Acts to increase police awareness of the measures to prevent and combat discrimination, in particular hate crime and hate speech. In May 2013, the Observatory and the OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights signed a memorandum of understanding regarding the implementation of the “Training against hate crimes for law enforcement” programme. The Observatory is a member of the European Union (EU) Fundamental Rights Agency’s Working party on improving reporting and recording of hate crime in the European Union. The working party was established in November 2014 in response to the “Council conclusions on combating hate crime in the European Union” adopted by the EU Council in 2013, in which the Council invited Member States to take appropriate measures to encourage the reporting of hate crimes by victims and witnesses.

E. Kuwait

25. The Government of Kuwait stressed that it does not encourage Nazism, neo-Nazism or other such practices and that incidents and manifestations of that kind do not exist in the country and are forbidden by law. The Government stressed the fact that Kuwait has ratified various international treaties designed to combat all forms of racism, including the ratification of the International Convention of the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. When international treaties ratified by Kuwait enter into force, they become an integral part of national legislation. As a consequence, all Government agencies, as well as individuals, are bound to abide by their provisions, and the judiciary must ensure that such provisions are respected.

26. The Government mentioned several provisions in the Constitution, including article 7, which cites equality as one of the pillars of society, and article 29, which enshrines the general principle of non-discrimination. The Government explained that discrimination on the grounds of “colour” and “property” is not mentioned because there is no racial discrimination in Kuwait and that the wording of the article is sufficient to dispel any doubts. Article 35 of the Constitution guarantees freedom of belief. Article 166 of the Constitution enshrines the right to take legal action without discrimination or distinction. Therefore, anyone whose rights have been violated has the right of recourse to the Kuwaiti courts to seek judicial protection.

27. The Government made reference to specific pieces of legislation that include provisions aimed at combating racial discrimination and racism, including article 6 of Act No. 24 of 1962 as well as article 6 of Decree Law No. 42 of 1978, which prohibits association and clubs, including sporting clubs, to “interfere in politics or in religious disputes or arouse partisan feelings on the basis of race, religious community or doctrine”. The Kuwaiti Criminal Code also contains general provisions criminalizing the dissemination of harmful ideas that could affect the country’s social and economic order. With regard to religion, article 19 of Act No. 3 of 2006 forbids any encroachment upon divinity, the Koran, the Prophets or the companions or wives of the Prophet, while article 11 of Act No. 61 of 2007 prohibits broadcast license holders from broadcasting or rebroadcasting material that could encroach upon, mock or defame divinity or theology.

28. The Government also mentioned article 1 of Decree Law No. 19 of 2012, which prohibits: advocacy or incitement of hatred or contempt for any social group by any means of expression; provocation of sectarian or tribal factionalism; promotion of an ideology based on the superiority of any race, group, colour, national or ethnic origin, religious confession or lineage; encouragement of any act of violence to that end; and the dissemination, propagation, printing, broadcasting, retransmission, production or circulation of false rumours likely to lead to any of the above. According to article 2 of the same Decree Law, anyone who commits an act in contravention of the provisions of article 1 shall be liable to a term of imprisonment of up to 7 years and/or payment of a fine between 10,000 and 100,000 Kuwaiti dinars.

29. The Government highlighted several provisions in criminal law designed to combat intolerance, stereotyping, stigmatization, discrimination, incitement to violence and violence against persons based on religion or belief. These provisions include: articles 109 to 111 and 113 of Act No. 16 of 1960; article 7 of Cybercrime Act No. 63 of 2015; and articles 19 and 21 of the Press and Publications Act No. 3 of 2006. The Government also stressed the right of persons who have been harmed as the result of an unlawful action to demand compensation for the damages suffered, as enshrined in the Decree Law No. 67 of 1980.

F. Morocco

30. The Government of Morocco reported on the legal framework that aims at addressing discrimination in general, including Law 34-09 of 2 July 2011 related to the health-care system and access to health, the internal regulation of hospitals of 2011, the new strategy 2012-2016 for mental illness, the national AIDS strategy and the access for migrants, refugees and asylum seekers to health services.

31. The Government referred to article 308-5 of the Penal Code, which sanctions incitement to racial discrimination or hatred. The provisions were strengthened by article 431-1-1, which defines hatred as contempt and aversion to persons for reason of their race, religion, sex or colour. The Government also indicated that three bills regarding asylum, immigration and trafficking are currently being discussed. Moreover, Law No. 83.13, related to audiovisual communications, forbids: advertising that could advance negative stereotypes about women; discriminatory advertising related to race, sex, nationality and religion; advertising that is degrading to the dignity of the people; violent advertising; and advertising that incites prejudicial behaviour with regard to the health, the security of people or goods or environmental protection. Furthermore, article 39 bis of the Press and Publication Code of 15 November 1958 prohibits incitement to racial discrimination or violence based on sex, origin, colour or ethnicity or religious membership. The cahier des charges of the Société d'Etudes et de Réalisations Audiovisuelles strengthens legal provisions regarding negative advertising.

32. The Government also highlighted the measures adopted to combat discrimination against foreigners. Morocco has elaborated a national immigration and asylum strategy and has provided support to civil society organizations working in the field of migration, with the aim of promoting tolerance and combating hatred and discrimination. The Ministry in charge of Moroccans living abroad and of migration affairs also organized a seminar on the “challenges of cultural diversity and integration”. In addition, strategic measures have been adopted to strengthen foreigners’ access to health care, education, the labour market, accommodation, legal aid and social and humanitarian assistance, including measures targeting youth and sport, and civil society.

33. The Government affirmed its commitment to combating racial discrimination and xenophobia in prisons by ensuring that all new prison wardens consistently receive appropriate training. The Government also reported its commitment to ensuring that children’s education includes learning tolerance, moderation, acceptance of others and religious coexistence, and that children are educated to fight against extremism, violence and racial discrimination. As a result of the introduction of the programme to combat illiteracy in mosques, there are a number of awareness-raising campaigns about the negative effects of all forms of discrimination. The Centre for Documentation and Cultural Activities organizes conferences and seminars stressing that Islam is a religion of tolerance.

G. Paraguay

34. The Government of Paraguay reported that, under article 137, its Constitution holds supremacy over other legal norms. The Government also underlined the fact that Paraguay has ratified various international instruments under which the Government is obligated to respect rights and liberties and to adopt measures in line with the provisions of those instruments. With regard to the inter-American system, the Government underscored the fact that the American Convention on Human Rights is an effective tool for determining the constitutionality of laws and guaranteeing the observance of human rights throughout the continent. Article 13 of the Convention concerning “Freedom of Thought and Expression” provides for a wide range of rights which guarantee this freedom, especially for those who have the responsibility to communicate and disseminate information. The exercise of this right shall not be subject to prior censorship. Paragraph 5 of the Convention stipulates that “Any propaganda for war and any advocacy of national, racial, or religious hatred that constitute incitements to lawless violence or to any other similar action against any person or group of persons on any grounds including those of race, colour, religion, language, or national origin shall be considered as offenses punishable by law.”

35. The Government also made reference to article 140 of the Constitution, which identifies Paraguay as a multicultural State, recognizing the diversity of the social composition of the population in the terms used in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. Regarding political parties and movements based on discriminatory or Nazi-apologetic ideologies, the Government stressed that the Constitution recognizes ideological freedom (article 24) and prohibits political parties and movements from establishing structures which, either directly or indirectly, involve the use or the call to violence as a means of doing politics (article 126). Ideologies that promote intolerance and discrimination against minorities on religious, ethnic, social status, political or trade unions preferences grounds are prohibited by law (article 88).

36. The Government also made reference to Law No. 1.160/97 of the Criminal Code (article 238), which criminalizes as a crime an act that publicly, at a meeting or through means of a publication, aims to disturb the public peace by condoning: (a) an attempted or committed crime or (b) a person convicted for having committed a crime. Under the law, such an offence may be punished with imprisonment of up to three years or a fine. The law also provides for the criminalization of incitement to commit punishable acts (article 237), understood as an act that publicly, at a meeting, or through the public disclosure of publications, incites the commission of illegal acts. Article 237 of the Criminal Code also states that for such incitement, perpetrators may be punished with imprisonment of up to five years or a fine.

H. Russian Federation

37. The Government of the Russian Federation reiterated its commitment to making every possible effort to prevent fascist organizations and movements from operating in the country, in accordance with the Federal Act No. 80-FZ of 19 May 1995 on the “Memorialisation of the Victory of the Soviet People in the Great Patriotic War of 1941-1945”. The Government explained its policy of combating nationalist ideologies embracing Nazi ideas, as set out in its Decree No. 1666 of the President of the Russian Federation of 19 December 2012 on the ethnic policy of the Russian Federation for the period up to 2025.

38. The Government reported that manifestations of fascism, Nazism and other ideas of racial supremacy were prosecuted under the law and that preventive measures had been recently adopted, in particular to avoid the involvement of and growth of propaganda among young people. The Government indicated that list No.20, which entered into force under the joint directive of 1 February 2016 of the Office of the Prosecutor General (No. 65/11) and of the Ministry of Internal Affairs (No.1), defines which articles of the Criminal Code are to be used to compile statistical reports applying to extremist crimes, including those committed for reasons of racial and ethnic hatred or enmity.

39. The Government also shared statistics from 2015<sup>2</sup> regarding offences, mainly defined under articles 280 (Public appeals to carry out extremist activities) and 282 (Incitement to hatred or enmity or insults to human dignity) of the Criminal Code. Further criminal statistics were shared, including the number of persons: (a) found guilty of acts aimed at inciting hatred or enmity or insulting human dignity on the grounds of race, ethnicity or religion (370 persons); (b) convicted of making public appeals for the carrying out of extremist activities under article 280 (1) of the Criminal Code (51 persons); and (c) found guilty of making public appeals for the carrying out of extremist activities through the use of mass media under article 280 (2) of the Criminal Code (26 persons).

<sup>2</sup> 1,329 extremist offences in 84 of the 85 regions of the Russian Federation, more than half of which were committed through the use of the Internet (825 offences under article 282 and 256 offences under article 280 of the Criminal Code).

40. The Government further reported that the proportion of extremist attacks on individuals, including those involving acts of violence over the past year, was less than one fifth of all extremist criminal acts (110 crimes). These figures attest to a certain level of stabilization, including with regard to inter-ethnic and interfaith tensions. The Government also specified that most crimes were minor offenses under article 115 of the Criminal Code.

41. The Government explained that, in 2015, its focus was mainly on the issue of detecting and investigating organized criminal groups that subscribed to a fundamentalist ideology. The Government also provided the number of such crimes (62 crimes involving the organization and operation of extremist conspiracies and organizations). Owing to the change in the focus of the organization of work to detect and eliminate the sources of financing of terrorism and extremism in 2015, the number of reported cases increased by a factor of 13 in comparison to 2014, and the number of cases involving the detection and suppression of extremist Internet crimes increased by 34 per cent.

42. The Government expressed its commitment to and involvement in preventing inter-ethnic conflicts that could escalate tensions and lead to rioting. On the basis of the Decree No. 602 of 5 May 2012 on the promotion of inter-ethnic harmony, law enforcement services had prevented more than 100 inter-ethnic clashes.

43. The Government also explained its policy regarding the education of children and young people, with the aim of preventing the occurrence of racism and extremism, in particular through the framework for the State Youth Policy for the period up to 2025, which was approved by an order of 29 November 2014, and the State programme entitled “Patriotic education of citizens of the Russian Federation for the period 2016-2020”, approved by an order of 30 December 2015.

44. The Government reported that it pays particular attention to the spiritual and moral education of children, and that educational programmes are meant to develop qualities such as tolerance, respect for other cultures and openness to dialogue and cooperation. Therefore, all State and municipal primary schools teach a comprehensive basic course on religious cultures and secular ethics to familiarize young people with the religious and cultural traditions of the peoples of the Russian Federation. Since 1 September 2015, the Government has introduced a subject entitled “Foundations of the spiritual and moral culture of the peoples of Russia” into the curriculum of all primary schools.

45. The Government also reported that, at the third in the series of “Bigiev’s readings”, at the International Theological Conference held from 27 to 29 April 2016, the matter of promoting tolerance towards members of different religions was discussed.

I. Saudi Arabia

46. The Government of Saudi Arabia reported that several national laws prohibit racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including the Basic Law of Governance (articles 8, 26 and 47), the Press and Publications Act (article 9), the Cybercrime Act (article 3) and the Code of Criminal Procedure

(article 2). Saudi Arabia also pointed out that the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination has become part of its domestic law.

47. The Government also reported that any citizens or residents who have suffered a violation of their rights can seek redress in several ways, including through senior administrators in government agencies, governmental and non-governmental human rights institutions, regional governors, the Council of the King and the Council of the Crown Prince and the judiciary.

48. The Government also noted that the Civil Society Associations and Institutions Act (article 8 (2)) prohibits the formation of associations that propagate ideas of racial superiority or racial hatred. In addition to the provisions contained in article 8 of the above-mentioned Act, the Ministry of Islamic Affairs, Da'wah and Guidance has issued working documents and instructions to imams and preachers in mosques, prohibiting them from promoting hate speech.

49. The Government reported that the Public Authority for Sport uses sporting activities of all kinds to combat racism and to alert society to its dangers. In cooperation with other bodies, the Authority organizes awareness-raising campaigns and warns against the dangers of sporting fanaticism. The Government regularly organizes activities at the local, regional and international level, that help to bring different cultures and societies closer together. One of the most significant of these activities is the annual Janadriyah festival of culture and heritage.

50. The Government sees civil society organizations and institutions as fundamental partners in its efforts to protect and strengthen human rights. Civil society entities receive and examine complaints, uncover violations and launch awareness-raising campaigns to promote tolerance and eradicate racism, and to alert people to its dangers. Such entities also issue reports on the condition of human rights in Saudi Arabia.

J. Senegal

51. The Government of Senegal referred to article 98 of its Constitution, which incorporates into national law the provisions of the international and regional human rights treaties to which Senegal is a party. The Government highlighted the fact that racial discrimination is prohibited under national legislation and that, to date, no cases involving acts of racism have been brought before the courts. However, on social networks and online discussion forums it is not unusual to find pejorative nicknames associated with certain nationalities.

52. The Government stressed that it had adopted legislative provisions aimed at reinforcing the legal framework of the fight against racism, complementing its ratification of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination in 1972. These measures include Law No. 81-77 of 1981 on the punishment of racial, ethnic or religious discriminatory acts; and Laws No. 79-02, 79-03 and 81-17, which prohibit all forms of discrimination based on race, gender or religion as the basis for entry or access to/or membership in an association.

53. The Government also referred to article 5 of the Constitution, which states that any act of racial, ethnic or religious discrimination shall be punished by the law. Furthermore, article 431-7 of the Criminal Code gives a definition of racism and xenophobia, and article 233 bis of the Criminal Code provides that anyone who incites or attempts to incite acts of intolerance between people of different religions or religious sects shall be punished with a fine ranging from 50,000 to 500,000 CFA francs and six months to two years' imprisonment.

54. With regard to the treatment of foreigners, the Government does not make any distinction between foreigners and nationals in the provision of access to education, health and justice. Any foreigner can appeal to the Senegalese courts to assert their rights or to seek remedies for acts of discrimination against them.

55. The Government also reported on the establishment of the Senegalese Committee on Human Rights in 1997, as well as the on the Human Rights Directorate and the Unit to combat trafficking in persons within the Ministry of Justice. The Government stressed that the country hosts different ethnic and religious groups who live in peace with one another.

K. Trinidad and Tobago

56. The Government of Trinidad and Tobago reported that, while no new legislation related to combating racism and xenophobia had been adopted within the past four years, the Constitution contains a number of protections against discrimination in general. Similarly, a number of legislative acts, including the Equal Opportunity Act (2000), the Police Complaints Authority Act (2006), the Summary Offences Act (1921), the Malicious Damage Act (1925), the Sedition Act (1920), the Anti-Terrorism Act (2005) and the International Criminal Court Act (2006) protect the population of the country against racism and racial discrimination.

57. The Government underlined the role played by the Ministry of Community Development, Culture and the Arts, which works to promote deeper collaboration between persons of varying cultural and ethnic backgrounds.

III. Contributions received from non-governmental and other organizations

A. Organization of the Jews in Bulgaria “Shalom”

58. The Organization of the Jews in Bulgaria expressed concern with regard to the events that allegedly took place in the city of Odessa, Ukraine, in May 2014, at which ultra-nationalist Ukrainian militants attacked and killed civilians shouting slogans such as “death to our enemies”. The organization reported that the Ukrainian authorities have not yet established any special mechanism to investigate these allegations.

B. Latvian Anti-Nazi Committee

59. The Latvian Anti-Nazi Committee expressed concern over the growth in neo-Nazi sentiment across Latvia. According to the Committee, several political figures have allegedly claimed that the annexation of Latvia as part of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1940 was a heinous crime and that its occupation by Nazi Germany in 1941 was an act of liberation of the Latvian people from the Bolshevik oppression.

60. The Committee reported that the Latvian Parliament had adopted a declaration on Latvian legionnaires during the Second World War on 29 October 1998, in which the State undertook to protect the honour and dignity of the Latvian legionnaires, equating veterans of the “Letland” division of Waffen SS to members of the national liberation movement.

61. The Committee also pointed out that Latvia has been holding annual days in honour of Latvian legionnaires since 1998, and that Latvian schools and preschools hold so-called “lessons of patriotism” where children are allegedly taught about the history of Waffen SS veterans as an example of how to protect their homeland. However, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has reported that these commemorations are private events, not supported by the State. Nevertheless, the Committee claimed that, several days before these annual commemorations, Latvia tightens its border controls and issues blacklists in order to prevent members of international anti-fascist movements from entering the country to counter the commemorations.

C. Latvian Human Rights Committee

62. The Latvian Human Rights Committee reported on the annual march honouring the veterans of the Latvian Waffen SS legion, which took place in the centre of Riga in March 2016 with the participation of Members of Parliament from the co-ruling National Alliance Party. With regard to the possible participation of the Government to the events, the Committee reported that the Prime Minister allegedly said that he had instructed the cabinet ministers not to participate, but that he would not hinder their participation or condemn any official for participation in the event.

63. The Committee also reported that, in September 2015, a court had acquitted Mr. Leonards Inkins a prominent far-right activist, for a second time. Mr. Inkins has allegedly promoted an old anti-Semitic forgery called the “Catechism of a Soviet Jew”. On a positive note, the Committee pointed out the holding, in March 2016, of the first-ever criminal case for inciting religious hatred. The Committee also reported on the refusal of the Register of Enterprises to register the web portal www.zarya.lv, which was founded by several radical opposition activists and a non-governmental organization. The Register of Enterprises allegedly claimed that the goal of the web portal was to grant citizenship to “non-citizens”.

D. World Veterans Federation

64. The World Veterans Federation reported that the glorification of Nazism and the Nazi movement, as well as the rise of neo-Nazism and the desecration of monuments and memorials to those who fought against Nazism, are issues of great concern to its membership. The Federation mentioned numerous resolutions on this matter adopted by various General Assemblies of the Federation, in particular those adopted in 2009 and 2012.

65. The Federation also submitted relevant resolutions and documentation on follow-up actions taken by member associations in the three years following the adoption of the above-mentioned resolutions by its General Assemblies.

IV. Conclusions and recommendations

66. The Special Rapporteur is grateful to all Governments and to all non-governmental and civil society organizations for the information provided on the measures implemented pursuant to General Assembly resolution 70/139, and in this regard recalls the importance of full cooperation with his mandate, as set out in Human Rights Council resolution 25/32.

67. The Special Rapporteur notes that some submissions referred to the phenomena identified in General Assembly resolution 70/139 and to the proliferation of extreme right-wing groups. Others stressed that no such phenomena existed within their borders. The Special Rapporteur reiterates that the human rights and democratic challenges posed by extremist political parties, movements and groups are universal, and that no country is immune to them, and calls upon States and all other stakeholders to increase their vigilance and to be proactive in strengthening their efforts and political will to recognize and effectively address those challenges.

68. The Special Rapporteur reiterates that any commemorative celebration of the Nazi regime, its allies and related organizations, whether official or unofficial, should be prohibited by States. The Special Rapporteur recalls paragraph 14 of General Assembly resolution 70/139, in which the Assembly stressed that such practices do injustice to the memory of the countless victims of crimes against humanity committed in the Second World War, in particular those committed by the SS organization and by those who fought against the anti-Hitler coalition and collaborated with the Nazi movement, and may negatively influence children and young people, and that failure by States to effectively address such practices is incompatible with the obligations of States Members of the United Nations under its Charter.

69. In this regard, the Special Rapporteur recalls his condemnation of any manifestation of religious intolerance, incitement, harassment or violence against persons or communities on the basis of ethnic origin or religious belief. Furthermore, the Special Rapporteur remains concerned about the continued scapegoating of vulnerable groups, including migrants, asylum seekers and ethnic minorities. Such discourse remains a powerful tool for politicians whose goal is to mobilize the masses to the detriment of social cohesion and human rights. The continued uncensored and unpunished expressions of supremacist, anti-Semitic and hateful opinions by some political leaders may be an indicator that societies are growing dangerously and increasingly tolerant of hate speech and extremist ideas.

70. The Special Rapporteur recalls recommendations made in previous reports to the Human Rights Council (see A/HRC/23/24, A/HRC/26/50, A/HRC/29/47 and A/HRC/32/49) and the General Assembly (see A/68/329, A/69/334 and A/70/321) and wishes to reiterate that these remain valid and current. These recommendations are presented again below.

A. Legislative measures

71. The Special Rapporteur welcomes the information provided regarding the ratification of a range of instruments, including the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and the inclusion of the Convention in national legal and constitutional frameworks. He urges those States that have not yet done so to ratify the Convention and to make the declaration under its article 14, thus providing the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination with the power to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals within its jurisdiction claiming to be victims of a violation by a State party of any of the rights set forth in the Convention.

72. The Special Rapporteur encourages States to adopt the legislation necessary to combat racism, while ensuring that the definition of racial discrimination complies with article 1 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. He calls for the updating of national anti-racism legislation in the light of the increasingly open expression of hate speech and incitement to violence against vulnerable groups. In this regard, he recalls that any legislative or constitutional measures adopted with a view to countering extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups and similar extremist ideological movements, should be in conformity with relevant international human rights standards. He also urges States to implement their obligations under article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and articles 19 to 22 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

73. The Special Rapporteur notes with appreciation that several States have prescribed in their criminal codes that racist and xenophobic motivation constitutes an aggravating circumstance, calling for heavier sanctions, not only against instigators but also their followers. While welcoming the information provided regarding measures taken to prevent discrimination against members of minorities, people of African descent, Roma, migrants, refugees and asylum seekers and to ensure their integration into society, the Special Rapporteur urges States to ensure the full and effective implementation of legal, policy and institutional measures protecting these groups of individuals and recommends that States effectively guarantee to these groups, without discrimination of any kind, the right to security and access to justice, adequate reparation, legal aid and appropriate information about their rights, as well as the prosecution and adequate sanctioning of those responsible for racist crimes against them, including the right to seek reparation for damages suffered as a result of such crimes.

74. The Special Rapporteur recalls paragraph 13 of the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference,<sup>3</sup> which states that any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence should be prohibited by law, as should be the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, incitement to racial discrimination as well as all acts of violence or incitement to such acts. In this regard, the Special Rapporteur calls upon all States to respect the commitments made in the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, which is a comprehensive framework for action against racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia.

B. Political measures

75. The Special Rapporteur calls upon States and all stakeholders to counter extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis, skinhead groups and similar extremist ideological movements. Greater vigilance from all relevant actors is therefore important, and this requires a comprehensive approach, based on a solid legal framework, complemented by other key measures, including education and awareness-raising programmes and victim-centred approaches, which should be further developed. Good practices, including some mentioned in the present report, should also be exchanged on a regular basis among all actors working in this field.

76. The Special Rapporteur reiterates his call on political leaders and parties to strongly condemn all messages disseminating ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, incitement to racial discrimination or xenophobia. These leaders should be aware of the moral authority they represent and should use it to promote tolerance and respect, refraining from forming coalitions with extremist parties of a racist or xenophobic character, and taking into account the need to ensure that political and legal systems reflect the multicultural character of their societies.

C. Education and capacity-building

77. The Special Rapporteur recalls that education remains the most effective means of countering the negative influence that extremist political parties, movements and groups may have on young people. Recalling his 2013 thematic report,<sup>4</sup> he recommends that States recognize the important role of education in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, particularly in promoting the principles of tolerance and respect for ethnic, religious and cultural diversity and preventing the proliferation of extremist racist and xenophobic movements and propaganda. Law enforcement officials and members of the judiciary should also have the capacity to address crimes motivated by racist, xenophobic, anti-Semitic or homophobic biases through the provision of comprehensive and mandatory human rights training, with a specific focus on racist and xenophobic crimes perpetrated by individuals linked to extremist political parties, groups and movements.

D. Internet and social media

78. The Special Rapporteur reiterates his concerns regarding the increased use of the Internet and social media by extremist political parties, movements and groups to promote and disseminate racist content.<sup>5</sup> He calls upon States to take all opportunities, including those provided by the Internet, to counter the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and to promote the values of equality, non-discrimination, diversity and democracy, while respecting their obligations under articles 19 and 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. States should adopt measures to counter ideas and biases based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and to strengthen freedom of expression, which plays a crucial role in promoting democracy and combating racist and xenophobic ideologies based on racial superiority.

E. Sports

79. The Special Rapporteur calls upon States to strengthen measures to prevent racist and xenophobic incidents at sporting events. As indicated in his 2014 report to the General Assembly,<sup>6</sup> he further emphasizes the key role of sports in promoting cultural diversity, tolerance and harmony. The Special Rapporteur recommends that States and other relevant stakeholders, such as sports federations, take advantage of sporting events to promote the values of tolerance and respect. He recalls paragraph 218 of the Programme of Action,<sup>7</sup> which urges States, in cooperation with intergovernmental organizations, the International Olympic Committee and international and regional sports federations, to intensify the fight against racism in sport by, among other things, educating the youth of the world through sport practised without discrimination of any kind and in the Olympic spirit, which requires human understanding, tolerance, fair play and solidarity.

F. Holocaust denial

80. The Special Rapporteur reiterates his absolute condemnation of any denial or attempt to deny the Holocaust and all manifestations of religious intolerance, incitement, harassment or violence against persons or communities based on ethnic origin or religious belief. He reiterates his call for the active preservation of the sites which served as Nazi death camps, concentration and forced labour camps and prisons and urges States to take legislative and educational measures to put an end to Holocaust denial.

G. Civil society and national human rights institutions

81. The Special Rapporteur recalls the importance of cooperating closely with civil society and international and regional human rights mechanisms to effectively counter extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis, skinhead groups and similar extremist ideological movements. In particular, the role played by civil society organizations and institutions in collecting information, working closely with victims and promoting democratic principles and human rights should be emphasized, and the sharing of good practices should be continued among all relevant stakeholders. He welcomes coordination between governmental structures and civil society entities to maximize efforts to adopt and promote anti-discrimination policies, and encourages such efforts.

82. The Special Rapporteur also calls upon national human rights institutions to develop appropriate programmes to promote tolerance of and respect for all and to collect relevant information. He further calls for national specialized bodies and national action plans for the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to also monitor closely the phenomenon of Nazism, neo-Nazism, and Holocaust denial.

H. The Media

83. The Special Rapporteur wishes to stress the positive role played by the media in combating the spread of extremist ideas, in particular in combating stereotypes, promoting a culture of tolerance and playing an integrative role by providing space for ethnic minorities to also have their voices heard.

I. The need for statistics and disaggregated data<sup>8</sup>

84. The Special Rapporteur reiterates his previous recommendations concerning the need to collect disaggregated data and statistics on racist, xenophobic, anti-Semitic and homophobic crimes in order to identify the types of offences committed, the characteristics of the victims and of the perpetrators and whether they are affiliated with extremist political parties, movements or groups. Such disaggregated data would enhance a better understanding of the phenomenon and identify effective measures to be taken to address these crimes. The Special Rapporteur further recalls the importance of collecting disaggregated data as one of the indicators to monitor the progress on the implementation of the 2030 Sustainable Development Goals adopted by the General Assembly on 25 September 2015.<sup>9</sup>

J. Other

85. In closing, while acknowledging the vital importance of keeping the issue of contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance on the international agenda, the Special Rapporteur would like to reflect on the work accomplished under his mandate thus far. This is the tenth report requested by the General Assembly on this issue. The Special Rapporteur has always endeavoured, with great commitment and understanding, to fulfil the request of the Assembly for two annual reports, one to the Human Rights Council and one to the Assembly. The Special Rapporteur reiterates his call for the consideration of an alternative approach in order to draw continuing attention to and highlight the nature of this phenomenon, which could involve a streamlining of the reporting process into one yearly report to the Assembly. The preparation of one consolidated report would allow for the collection of views from all submissions received. The Special Rapporteur also highlights that special procedures mechanisms have various methods of work, including communications to country visits, which could be used to continue addressing this important issue. The Special Rapporteur reiterates his hope that the Assembly, at its seventy-first session, will consider his suggestions in its deliberations and in the process of adopting a resolution on this topic.
