Operational highlights

- More than 35,000 Burundian refugees living in Mtabila Camp repatriated in an orderly, dignified and safe manner over the course of six weeks.
- The authorities of the United Republic of Tanzania (Tanzania) showed increased flexibility in accepting new arrivals coming mainly from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and pledged to reactivate the National Eligibility Committee (NEC) in 2013.
- UNHCR and its partners protected and assisted some 67,000 refugees (mainly from the DRC) in Nyarugusu Camp.
- More than 750 refugees departed for resettlement in third countries in 2012. The applications for another 600 individuals were submitted for resettlement consideration.
- With UNHCR's support, the Government resumed the naturalization process (halted in 2011) for more than 2,000 Somali Bantu refugees in Chogo Settlement.
- The East African Community, supported by UNHCR, made significant progress in adopting a regional approach to international protection.

People of concern

UNHCR's main populations of concern in Tanzania are: DRC refugees who have fled conflict in the Kivus region since the 1990s and Burundian refugees who fled during the conflict in Burundi during the same period; and newly naturalized Tanzanians (some 162,000 Burundian refugees who were naturalized in April 2010 and are now awaiting local integration).

Achievements and impact

Favourable protection environment

- The Government had indicated that the NEC, which has not been convened since 2009, would resume refugee status determination (RSD) in 2013. In the meantime, UNHCR has conducted RSD for urgent cases of refugees at risk.
- UNHCR conducted 13 joint border-monitoring missions with the authorities and trained more than 100 border guards and other officials to help build local capacity.
- The Government agreed to allow asylum-seekers arriving from the DRC to stay at a transit centre in Kigoma pending the presentation of their cases to the NEC.
- Refugees received legal assistance on a regular basis, and UNHCR made 199 legal interventions on their behalf.
- A mobile court was established in Mishamo and legal aid given to victims of crime, thereby greatly increasing access to justice for refugees and reducing impunity. Five perpetrators of sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) were sentenced to prison terms ranging from one to 30 years.

Security from violence and exploitation

- All survivors of SGBV were referred to designated implementing partners for appropriate assistance, including medical, legal, psychosocial and material support.
- Nearly 73 per cent of the youth population in Nyarugusu participated in recreational and capacity-building projects, including adolescent sexual and reproductive-health awareness programmes.
- The SGBV team in Nyarugusu introduced a set of guidelines, Caring for Child Survivors of Sexual Abuse, and supported a more survivor-centred approach through a number of activities, including training for social workers dealing with SGBV.
- A Best Interest Determination process was initiated or completed for 57 per cent of unaccompanied minors and separated children in the camps in 2012.

Basic needs and essential services

- More than 96 per cent of children in Nyarugusu Camp, of whom 52 per cent are girls and 1 per cent are children with disabilities, attended primary school. Non-formal education was provided in Mtabila Camp until June 2012.
- All women and girls of reproductive age (some 35,000) in the Nyarugusu and Mtabila camps were provided with sanitary materials in 2012.
- The average water supply in both camps was maintained at 33 litres per person per day, well above the minimum standard, while latrine coverage stood at more than 96 per cent.
- The health situation in the camps remained stable, with both the crude mortality and under-five mortality rates at average levels. Refugees in camps had access to HIV and AIDS prevention and care services.
- UNHCR continued to provide support to the Government by delivering basic health and water services in the “Old settlements”.

Assessment of results

Results were largely positive in the area of durable solutions for refugees, following the closure of Mtabila Camp and the successful repatriation of Burundian refugees. Resettlement proceeded at a steady pace, despite staffing constraints. Moreover, progress was made on resuming the naturalization process for the approximately 2,000 Somali Bantu refugees in Tanzania. In spite of the focus in 2012 on the closure of Mtabila Camp, UNHCR and its partners were able to maintain a reasonable level of protection and assistance in Nyarugusu. Standards in health, education, sanitation and water were maintained or improved. However, while performance indicators generally demonstrated positive developments in the protection of children and victims of SGBV, serious gaps were identified with regard to the prevention of SGBV.

The deterioration of security in the DRC and the closure of Mtabila Camp, coupled with UNHCR's advocacy on behalf of refugees, led to a change in the Government's attitude to asylum and the reactivation of the NEC.

Unfortunately, the Government's encampment policy hindered progress towards ensuring protection and assistance for urban refugees. However, under its mandate, UNHCR was able to facilitate access to asylum for those facing an immediate risk of refoulement, and to initiate the resettlement process for urban refugees with special needs.

Constraints

One of the main constraints in Tanzania was the lack of a Government decision on the relocation of the 162,000 newly naturalized Tanzanians living in the "Old settlements". This led to the stalling of the local integration process for this population. The lack of NEC sessions in 2012 to review the backlog of hundreds of cases and the practice of deporting "illegal migrants" without screening procedures have hampered access to asylum. Moreover, the Government's policy of encampment continued to block refugees' efforts to become self-reliant.

The lack of educational facilities in Mtabila as well as the suspension, decided by the authorities, of informal education in June 2012, left Burundian children under prepared to re-enter their country's education system upon their return home.

The priority placed on the closure of Mtabila Camp hindered the provision of services in Nyarugusu. A general distribution of non-food items (NFIs), last carried out in 2007, continued to be postponed. However, UNHCR was able to reach people with specific needs through a targeted delivery of NFIs.

The continuing lack of stability in eastern DRC had a considerable impact on voluntary repatriation, with only 32 Congolese returning home in 2012, while a steady trickle of new arrivals was recorded.

Unmet needs

- Apart from some 1,400 persons with specific needs and 1,500 persons with disabilities, nearly 64,600 residents of Nyarugusu Camp did not receive NFIs.
- Insufficient resources were available to assist UNHCR's implementing partners to meet identified gaps in SGBV prevention and child protection in Nyarugusu Camp.
- The lack of sufficient infrastructure for education, including classrooms, in Nyarugusu led to congestion. The introduction of a school shift system (double sessions) improved the teacher/pupil ratio, though it remained well short of acceptable standards.
- Verification/registration of refugees in Nyarugusu, hosting some 67,000 refugees, was not conducted in 2012.
- The monitoring of lakeshore villages in north-western Tanzania to spot the arrival of new DRC asylum-seekers could not be conducted.

Working with others

- UNHCR worked closely with the Ministry of Home Affairs (Refugee Services Department), its direct counterpart in Tanzania, particularly during the complex and sensitive closure of Mtabila Camp.
- To ensure coordinated and coherent UN action to address refugee issues in Tanzania, UNHCR worked closely with FAO, IOM, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP, as part of the Delivering as One initiative. UNHCR also led the Refugee Programme Working Group under the UN Development Assistance Plan.
- UNHCR worked directly with 10 international and national NGOs to ensure the delivery of protection and assistance to refugees and other people of concern.

Financial information

Expenditures in the United Republic of Tanzania | 2008 to 2012

In line with the declining numbers of refugees in the country, the budget for the refugee programme has progressively gone down over the past five years. The financial requirements for UNHCR's operation in the United Republic of Tanzania amounted to some USD 80 million in 2012, 13 per cent less than the requirements of USD 92 million in 2011. The level of funding made available allowed the operation to expend USD 21.5 million.
