Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its fifteenth session from 21 January to 1 February 2013. The review of Burundi was held at the 7th meeting on 24 January 2013. The delegation of Burundi was headed by Clotilde Niragira, Minister of National Solidarity, Human Rights and Gender. At its 13th meeting, held on 29 January 2013, the Working Group adopted the report on Burundi.

2. On 14 January 2013, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Burundi: Benin, India and Republic of Moldova.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Burundi:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/15/BDI/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/15/BDI/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/15/BDI/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by the Czech Republic, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Burundi through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The head of the delegation presented the report of Burundi for the second cycle of the universal periodic review, emphasizing that Burundi had made substantial progress in the promotion and protection of human rights as a whole.

6. He thanked the entire international community, and especially the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, for supporting the people of Burundi even during the most difficult moments of the crisis.

7. Burundi had taken various practical measures in response to the recommendations made during the first cycle of the universal periodic review.¹ It had drafted a bill on the prevention of, protection from and punishment of gender-based violence, which was in the process of being adopted. A pilot centre had been established to provide comprehensive support to victims of gender-based violence. The State had also taken steps towards ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol. It had developed a national policy on human rights and child protection. In addition, a national children's forum and a women's forum were being established. Burundi had also set up an independent national electoral commission to thoroughly prepare for the 2015 elections. It had developed a strategic framework to promote growth and combat poverty, a national strategy for the socioeconomic reintegration of persons affected by conflict, and a national strategy to combat food insecurity.

8. The delegation recognized, however, that Burundi was facing some challenges and impediments to the fulfilment of its human rights obligations.

9. In the knowledge that the promotion and protection of human rights went hand in hand with development, Burundi had just adopted a new strategic framework to promote growth and combat poverty that focused on economic growth and job creation.

10. Burundi already had plenty of experience it could share with other nations, given the solutions it had found for the internecine conflicts that had lasted for decades and had crippled development. Thanks to the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi of 2000, the country had been able to exorcise the demons of division and ethnic hatred. Burundi had managed to train a new army and a national police force, which had received worldwide acclaim for their performance.

11. Burundi had established several national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, namely the Ombudsman, the National Independent Human Rights Commission (NIHRC) and the National Commission on Land and Other Properties.

12. With regard to civil and political rights, the new Criminal Code had, inter alia, abolished the death penalty, raised the age of criminal responsibility from 13 to 15 years and defined rape and torture as offences. The Code punished war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide, which were not subject to statutory time limits or amnesty.

13. In addition, Burundi had developed a criminal policy document to serve as a guide for judicial officials when processing case files, so as to ensure respect for defendants' rights with a view to creating a humane criminal justice system.

14. Burundi had taken several steps to ensure that judicial services were more accessible and more evenly distributed. A policy creating itinerant judges had been established to dispense community justice, and legal advice services were offered through the courts in order to respond quickly to gross human rights violations. In addition, "focal point" judges had been appointed in civil courts to monitor cases involving gender-based violence.

15. Burundi was a State based on the rule of law and was committed to creating an accessible, independent, efficient, gender-sensitive judicial system that ensured respect for human rights. A preparatory committee for the national consultations on justice had been established to determine how best to strengthen the independence of the judiciary.

16. Burundi had continued its efforts to reduce prison overcrowding by releasing prisoners on parole and granting presidential pardons. More than 7,000 prisoners, or more than 45 per cent of the prison population, had benefited from such acts of clemency.

17. A new Code of Criminal Procedure had been drafted; it had been adopted by the National Assembly and was currently before the Senate. One of the changes in the new Code was the introduction of community service as an alternative to imprisonment. The Government was also working through the prison administration to improve prison conditions: 7 out of 11 prisons had been renovated so as to separate children from adults and women from men.

18. With a view to promoting full protection for the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Government of Burundi had prepared a press bill, in which the main innovation was the decriminalization of press offences.

19. With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, the delegation explained the progress made in providing access to basic social services, among other things, and said that the Government provided free education for all children in primary school. Health care was also provided free of charge for children under 5 years of age and for women giving birth. The delegation noted the challenges with regard to the quality of health care, the high mortality rates among children and the labour force, and problems of hygiene, sanitation and access to drinking water.

20. The Constitution guaranteed the principle of equality among all citizens and established a minimum quota of 30 per cent representation for women in parliament and in the Government. With regard to inheritance, matrimonial regimes and bequests, the Government had launched a study on the effects of having no written law on those matters and on the advantages of having one.

21. With regard to trafficking in persons, Burundi had ratified the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. In addition, the trafficking and exploitation of women and girls were prohibited under the revised Criminal Code.

22. Burundi had launched a study on the effects of having no written law on inheritance, matrimonial regimes and bequests, and on the advantages of having one. A national plan of action was currently being prepared and implemented in response to Security Council resolution 1325 (2000).

23. On the subject of ethnic minorities, the delegation stressed that the Batwa's rights were protected and that their community was represented in both chambers of parliament and in other republican institutions, as provided for in the Constitution.

24. The Government had taken special measures to ensure protection for vulnerable groups, particularly albinos. It had ordered that cases involving violations of the rights of albinos should be handled without delay, and the perpetrators of such violations received the maximum penalties.

25. Burundi had not only ratified the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (see paragraph 21 above) after the first cycle of the universal periodic review, but was also considering adopting several other international legal instruments.

26. The delegation acknowledged that the country still faced difficulties and challenges, including in the areas of population growth, food insecurity and the effective implementation of the strategic framework to promote growth and combat poverty. Human rights violations were still taking place: they included murder, gender-based violence and violations resulting from conflicts over land.

27. However, there were early signs that the people of Burundi were ready to rebuild the country on new foundations with a view to achieving social cohesion and effective reconciliation. The vast majority of refugees had returned, and the last refugee camp — Mtabila Camp in the United Republic of Tanzania — had closed on 31 December 2012. Internally displaced persons were gradually returning to their places of origin. A truth and reconciliation commission would also be established.

28. After calling on all its partners to help Burundi with support of all kinds, the head of the delegation reaffirmed the Government's commitment to continuing its policy of strengthening the democratic process and the rule of law, expanding civil liberties and improving the protection of human rights.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

29. During the interactive dialogue 74 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

30. Djibouti congratulated Burundi on the quality of its national report. It commended efforts for the promotion of human rights, in particular the adoption of a law in 2010 for the creation of a national human rights institution. Djibouti made recommendations.

31. Egypt noted the review conducted by Burundi to bring legislation into conformity with the principals of human rights. New provisions in the Criminal Code addressing the protection of children, the crime of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, torture and rape were welcomed. Egypt made recommendations.

32. Ethiopia expressed its appreciation of the progress in poverty reduction, protection of women and children and improvement in prison conditions. It asked for additional information on the efforts to promote democracy, good governance, poverty reduction and empowerment of women.

33. France thanked Burundi for the presentation of its national report and congratulated it on the progress that had been made in several areas in the field of human rights. It made recommendations.

34. Germany noted that despite the progress made, the human rights situation in Burundi still raised concerns. It made recommendations.

35. Guatemala noted the establishment of the NIHRC as well as the creation within the police of the Directorate-General for Civil Protection. It took note of the ratification process of several human rights instruments. Guatemala made recommendations.

36. The Holy See acknowledged efforts for peace and national reconciliation, the NIHRC, the ratification of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, women's participation and the Child and Family Department. It made recommendations.

37. Hungary welcomed the legislative efforts of Burundi as well as the NIHRC. It raised concerns about impunity regarding political killings and torture; sexual violence; and the criminalization of same-sex relations. It made recommendations.

38. Indonesia commended several measures, including on women's representation in decision-making bodies and on education, in particular a programme aimed at promoting girls' education and eradicating dropout. It noted the National Health Development Plan. Indonesia made recommendations.

39. Ireland welcomed the NIHRC and the abolition of the death penalty. It expressed its regret that the Truth and Reconciliation Commission had not been established by 2012 and that the establishment of a special tribunal had stalled. It noted concerns about the intimidation of journalists and human rights defenders. Ireland made recommendations.

40. Japan commended the progress made on the rule of law, good governance, and gender equality. It expressed its appreciation of the high percentage of women represented in the National Assembly and in Cabinet posts, but also expressed concern about cases of violence against girls in schools. Japan made recommendations.

41. Kenya noted the updating of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the consenting to additional relevant international legal instruments, as well as the recent creation of the NIHRC. Kenya made a recommendation.
42. Latvia noted that Burundi had invited several special procedures mandate holders to visit the country and that a majority of them had already visited Burundi. However, it mentioned that a number of requests to visit had not yet been accepted. Latvia made a recommendation.
43. Libya commended steps taken to ratify a number of international human rights instruments. Praising the adoption of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, Libya raised concerns about the high level of child exploitation. It made a recommendation.
44. Madagascar praised progress made in the field of human rights since the first examination of Burundi under the UPR in 2008. It mentioned the NIHRC, the abolition of the death penalty, the explicit criminalization of genocide and the trafficking of women and girls. Madagascar made recommendations.
45. Malaysia commended the establishment of the NIHRC; the minimum quota of 30 per cent for the representation of women in decision-making bodies; the progress made in the protection of children; and the fair access to health services. Malaysia made recommendations.
46. Mauritania referred to the establishment of the NIHRC, the Ombudsman and the specialized agency for the protection of minors and women. It encouraged Burundi to continue its efforts to address illiteracy.
47. Mexico acknowledged efforts made to overcome the recent history of suffering and serious human rights violations. It encouraged Burundi to continue the implementation of international human rights standards. Mexico made recommendations.
48. Morocco noted with satisfaction the cooperation with the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi. Morocco inquired about the progress made in the establishment of a High Court of Justice and the preparation for the conference (états généraux) on the justice system, as well as about the measures taken to reintegrate detainees in the society. It also inquired about the current status of the Press Act.
49. Namibia noted with appreciation the ratification of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Protocol). It commended the new Criminal Code, but raised concerns about the lack of access to justice, the lack of qualified personnel in the judicial system and the low representation of women in Parliament. Namibia made recommendations.
50. The Netherlands commended the variety of media and asked how that related to the new media law, which would presumably be more restrictive on press media. It urged the Government to continue dialogue with opposition parties. It noted with concern that education policy entrenched discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. The Netherlands made recommendations.
51. Norway noted that adequate funding would be essential to the success of the new institutions, such as the NIHRC, the Ombudsman and the police unit for civil protection. It expressed concern at the high number of extrajudicial killings and the lack of investigation in most cases. Norway made recommendations.
52. Pakistan took positive note of the establishment of the NIHRC, the Ombudsman and a specialized unit to protect women and children. It recalled the challenges of meeting human rights obligations in a post-conflict situation. Pakistan made recommendations.

53. The State of Palestine welcomed efforts in the areas of, inter alia, reduction of poverty and promotion of gender equality. Amendments to the Criminal Code and measures to protect children from domestic violence were commended. The State of Palestine urged Burundi to adopt a national plan for children's rights. It made recommendations.

54. Paraguay noted the revision of criminal legislation on torture, genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, and the abolition of capital punishment. It welcomed the establishment of the NIHRC and noted cooperation between Burundi and OHCHR. Paraguay made recommendations.

55. The delegation of Burundi thanked the representatives for their questions and reaffirmed its Government's willingness to listen to their advice and suggestions so that together they could see how best to meet the challenges facing the country. The delegation grouped its replies by theme.

56. With regard to the question about the establishment of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, the bill was in the process of being adopted by parliament. Burundi had not been able to establish the Commission in 2012 due to various sociopolitical and organizational impediments, but the President of the Republic was committed to establishing the Commission in 2013. The Government had deemed it unwise to combine the legal provisions governing the two transitional justice mechanisms, one non-judicial (the Truth and Reconciliation Commission) and the other judicial (the Special Tribunal). The legal provisions governing the latter would likely be drafted once the Commission had submitted its report.

57. With regard to impunity for serious human rights violations in the form of crimes and extrajudicial executions, it had been pointed out that the number of violations had dropped significantly and that the perpetrators of offences were brought to justice, as demonstrated by the recent arrest of a number of soldiers and police officers.

58. Regarding the concerns about the intimidation of journalists and human rights defenders, the delegation pointed out that freedom of expression was guaranteed. No journalists were intimidated. On the other hand, anyone who violated the law was prosecuted regardless of their profession. A bill decriminalizing press offences had been drafted, and the media had been given the opportunity to express their complaints about the bill.

59. Special procedures mandate holders were welcome: Burundi had worked closely with the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi for eight years. The delegation would look into the possibility of extending a standing invitation to mandate holders.

60. Regarding the recommendation to adopt a specific law on violence against women, the Government was currently analysing a bill dealing specifically with gender issues, which was intended to protect women, girls and schoolchildren. In addition, anyone convicted of violence against women or children was liable to receive the maximum penalty.

61. With regard to the rights of the child, the head of the delegation said that a decree establishing a national children's forum had been signed and was in the process of being implemented. In addition, the Government was developing a national policy to protect the rights of the child, as it recognized that children were the country's future. Burundi had established a national policy on education for girls, and there was parity between girls and boys in access to school.

62. Concerning inheritance, matrimonial regimes and bequests, a bill had been submitted to parliament, but for the time being the Government had decided to launch a study on the impact and benefits of such a law.

63. The independence of the judiciary was guaranteed by the Constitution, but tangible reforms could be expected. The need for reform had already been pointed out during the negotiation of the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement. The Government was preparing for the national consultations on justice with a view to ensuring the full independence of the judiciary. The consultations would be held in the second half of 2013.

64. Concerning the 2015 elections and the opposition members in exile, some opposition members had already returned to the country, after the Government had consistently reached out to them to facilitate their return. Burundi needed all of its citizens to participate in the 2015 elections.

65. With regard to the independence of the National Independent Human Rights Commission, the delegation thanked partners for their assistance and reiterated its request for their continued support. It pointed out that the running costs of the Commission were covered by the State budget.

66. The Batwa were recognized as an ethnic group under the Constitution and did not suffer from any discrimination. With regard to protection for albinos, the delegation repeated that the perpetrators of offences against those persons received the maximum penalties.

67. The Philippines noted efforts by Burundi to improve its legal and institutional human rights framework and increase legal protection for women and children. It welcomed the second phase of the Strategic Framework for Growth and Poverty Reduction. The Philippines made a recommendation.

68. The Republic of Korea took note of the establishment of the NIHRC, the revised Criminal Code and the measures taken to protect albinos. Burundi was encouraged to transform plans into actions. The Republic of Korea made recommendations.

69. The Republic of Moldova appreciated the strengthened institutional framework for human rights, including the NIHRC, and noted the willingness of Burundi to combat impunity. Work to improve children's rights was welcomed. The Republic of Moldova made recommendations.

70. Romania took note of positive developments in Burundi. Despite the remaining challenges, Romania hoped that reform projects would be pursued without delay and encouraged further work to improve the situation of women. Romania made recommendations.

71. Rwanda welcomed action for gender equality, notably the 30 per cent quota for women in decision-making bodies. It highlighted reforms to the business climate; poverty reduction and job creation; the new Ombudsman; and access to basic services. Rwanda made a recommendation.

72. Senegal noted achievements, notably in the justice, education and health sectors. It also noted measures to eliminate violence against women and increase their involvement in decision-making, and to provide free education. Senegal made recommendations.

73. Singapore welcomed the legislative and institutional reforms made by Burundi with respect to the rule of law, and the legislative and administrative measures to protect children, particularly the national plan of action to eliminate child labour and the national strategy to combat the phenomenon of street children. It made recommendations.

74. Slovakia acknowledged the abolition of the death penalty. It noted the establishment of the Child and Family Department within the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights and Gender. It made recommendations.

75. Slovenia welcomed the NIHRC; the plan of action to eliminate child labour; and the equal gender distribution in schools. Slovenia remained concerned about girls' dropout, teenage pregnancies and the criminalization of same-sex relations. It made recommendations.

76. South Africa expressed appreciation for the strengthening of the capacity to protect human rights and the cooperation between Burundi and OHCHR. It welcomed the Strategic Plan for Justice and the draft law on gender violence. It noted the continued importance of providing Burundi with technical assistance. South Africa made recommendations.

77. Spain commended efforts towards political stability and human rights promotion, particularly the establishment of the NIHRC. It welcomed the abolition of the death penalty and the criminalization in the Criminal Code of genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and torture. Spain made recommendations.

78. Sri Lanka welcomed efforts in the areas of protection of children's and women's rights; criminalization of trafficking, exploitation and prostitution; improvement in access to health care; restoring peace, including the reintegration of former child soldiers; and civilian disarmament. It made recommendations.

79. Sudan acknowledged efforts to protect human rights, particularly the ratification of several human rights treaties and the measures to combat violence against women. It urged Burundi to speed up the adoption of a law to fight gender violence. Sudan made recommendations.

80. Switzerland acknowledged the abolition of the death penalty in the 2009 Criminal Code and the establishment of the NIHRC. It encouraged Burundi to continue its efforts regarding gender equality and women rights. It made recommendations.

81. Thailand commended efforts to protect Batwa and albinos, empower rural women and improve detention conditions. Thailand was concerned about discrimination against girls, albinos and Batwa children in education, and about the criminalization of homosexuality. Thailand made recommendations.

82. Togo took note of the laws on human rights; the abolition of the death penalty; the provision for punishment of torture, genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity in the Criminal Code; the NIHRC; the promotion of girls' education; and the national health plan for 2011–2015. It made recommendations.

83. Tunisia noted the establishment of the NIHRC, the revised Criminal Code, and the current revision of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Actions to introduce transitional justice mechanisms were welcomed. Tunisia made recommendations.

84. Turkey welcomed the abolition of death penalty, and free health care for children and during maternity. It urged further action on monitoring mechanisms, birth registration and juvenile justice. Turkey made recommendations.

85. Uganda noted achievements in the implementation of a 30 per cent quota for women's representation in decision-making bodies, and the provision for punishment for the trafficking, exploitation and prostitution of women and girls. Uganda made a recommendation.

86. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland commended several measures, but objected to the criminalization of homosexuality. It urged the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (OP-CEDAW). Extrajudicial executions, torture and a lack of accountability remained serious concerns. The United Kingdom made recommendations.

87. The United States of America welcomed several measures, but expressed concern at political violence, impunity, harassment of those reporting corruption and human rights abuses, and the absence of prosecutions of perpetrators of trafficking. It made recommendations.

88. Uruguay welcomed the NIHRC. Despite changes to criminal legislation, the continued criminalization of homosexuality raised concerns. Uruguay noted that de facto discrimination of certain groups continued to be tolerated. It made recommendations.

89. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela highlighted the NIHRC, the amended criminal code, measures to protect children, the national strategy to combat gender-based violence and the provision of health insurance cards. It made a recommendation.

90. Viet Nam noted the efforts for national reconstruction. Measures had been introduced to foster peace, the rule of law, social cohesion and the enjoyment of basic human rights, particularly by women and children. Viet Nam made recommendations.

91. Zimbabwe highlighted efforts to establish a truth and reconciliation commission. It welcomed the NIHRC, amendments to the Criminal Code, and the implementation of quotas to increase women's participation in decision-making bodies. Zimbabwe made recommendations.

92. Algeria noted quotas for women in decision-making posts; action taken to combat trafficking and discrimination against albinos and Batwa; programmes for girls' education and the national sanitation plan. Algeria made recommendations.

93. Angola took note of the new Criminal Code; the NIHRC; the ratification of the Palermo Protocol, and action taken on disarmament, transitional justice, women and children, and poverty reduction. Angola made a recommendation.

94. Argentina welcomed the establishment of the NIHRC and a tripartite commission involving the Government, the United Nations and civil society to set up transitional justice mechanisms. Argentina made recommendations.

95. Armenia noted legislative improvements to strengthen human rights. It requested more information on measures to implement transitional justice mechanisms and create a truth and reconciliation commission. Armenia made recommendations.

96. Australia welcomed the decrease in political killings, but remained concerned about continuing reports of torture and extrajudicial executions. It acknowledged the important role of civil society, journalists and opposition parties. Australia made recommendations.

97. Austria welcomed the operational NIHRC and plans for a truth and reconciliation commission. It was concerned about reports of extrajudicial executions, arbitrary detentions and harassment of human rights defenders and journalists. It asked how the situation of Batwa would be improved. Austria made recommendations.

98. Azerbaijan supported efforts for the peace process. It welcomed the strengthening of the legislative and institutional frameworks of Burundi, measures to combat gender-based violence and positive steps to protect and promote children's rights. Azerbaijan made recommendations.

99. Bangladesh noted that poverty remained a serious issue, hampering the full enjoyment of human rights in a country struggling to recover from civil war. Nevertheless, Burundi was making considerable efforts to improve human rights, despite a lack of resources. Bangladesh called for adequate international support for the endeavours of Burundi.

100. Belgium was concerned about extrajudicial executions and combating impunity, and asked what measures were being taken to advance prosecutions. It would support training for the judiciary. Belgium was concerned about legislative restrictions on freedom of expression, public demonstrations and not-for-profit organizations. Belgium made recommendations.

101. Brazil welcomed steps to promote democracy and human rights following a long civil war, especially efforts to promote national reconciliation and civil and political rights and to combat extreme poverty. Brazil pledged to cooperate in implementing the Strategic Framework for Growth and Poverty Reduction. It made recommendations.

102. Burkina Faso noted legislative changes in Burundi, especially to reform the justice system and ensure access for all. It commended efforts to combat violence against women and guarantee enjoyment of women's rights. Significant challenges remained in ensuring human rights in Burundi. Burkina Faso made a recommendation.

103. Cambodia noted the commitment of Burundi to its reform programmes, particularly regarding the judiciary. It recognized the need for Burundi to build its capacity to ensure sustainable development and encouraged Burundi to address remaining challenges, with the support of the international community.

104. Canada enquired about measures to lift restrictions on peaceful demonstrations. It welcomed investigations into allegations of summary executions of opposition activists and called for the perpetrators to be prosecuted. Restrictions on freedom of the press were a concern. Canada encouraged the adoption of draft legislation on equality between men and women. It made recommendations.

105. Cape Verde welcomed the revised Criminal Code, the NIHRC, measures to protect vulnerable minorities and plans for legislation to protect women's and children's rights. It encouraged efforts to alleviate poverty and ensure the economic and social development of the people of Burundi. Cape Verde made a recommendation.

106. Chad welcomed legislative and institutional reforms undertaken by Burundi to improve the promotion and protection of human rights and its efforts to ensure the rights of women, children, Batwa and albinos. Chad made a recommendation.

107. Chile appreciated the willingness of Burundi to implement the recommendations and voluntary commitments made following the submission of the national report in 2008. It particularly welcomed the amendments to the Criminal Code in 2009. Chile made recommendations.

108. China highlighted the efforts made by Burundi to promote gender equality and respect for women's rights, strengthen protection for children and reduce girls' school dropout. It welcomed the National Health Development Plan 2011–2015, which would guarantee people the right to health. China made a recommendation.

109. Colombia applauded the creation of the NIHRC and achievements in the establishment of a truth and reconciliation commission. All countries faced challenges in protecting and promoting human rights; dialogue, cooperation and assistance were key elements in sharing good practice and strengthening national efforts. Colombia made recommendations.

110. The Congo noted steps taken to: guarantee access to justice; improve detention conditions; and combat torture and violence against women. It encouraged Burundi to ensure the effective implementation of legislative and institutional reforms.

111. Costa Rica welcomed efforts to ensure greater enjoyment of human rights. It was concerned about impunity regarding torture, extrajudicial executions related to political violence and the limited access for children with disabilities to the education system. Costa Rica made recommendations.

112. Côte d'Ivoire urged Burundi to ensure the promotion and protection of all human rights, including for women, children and vulnerable people. Burundi should request support from the international community in implementing the recommendations from the first UPR cycle on establishing food security and combating poverty. Côte d'Ivoire made a recommendation.

113. Cuba welcomed policies to improve living standards; combat poverty and extreme poverty; combat HIV/AIDS; promote gender equality, transform the economy in pursuit of sustainable growth; improve access to quality basic services; and strengthen social protection. Cuba made a recommendation.

114. Cyprus commended Burundi on honouring its commitment to criminalize torture under its new Criminal Code. However, it was concerned at reports of continued incidents of torture by government officials and members of the Armed Forces. Cyprus made recommendations.

115. The Czech Republic welcomed efforts to overcome challenges in the process of reconciliation and strengthening the rule of law, the abolition of the death penalty and the criminalization of torture under the new Criminal Code, but was concerned that the Code also criminalized same-sex relations. It made recommendations.

116. In answer to the question about the situation of the Batwa, the delegation of Burundi reiterated that the Batwa were recognized as an ethnic group under the Constitution and were considered to be full-fledged Burundians with the same rights as other citizens. Moreover, Burundi had taken measures to protect albinos, and perpetrators of offences against albinos were severely punished.

117. In the light of allegations of extrajudicial executions, Burundi had set up a commission of inquiry, which had demonstrated that some murders had been committed by police officers and soldiers. Those responsible for the murders had been arrested. There was no impunity for the police, the military or the intelligence services; 250 police officers and 300 soldiers were in prison for human rights violations.

118. The delegation emphasized the need for economic recovery as a prerequisite for good governance and the rule of law. It noted that 40 per cent of the State budget was allocated to socioeconomic sectors, and that the Government had established an institutional framework to combat corruption. It further noted a 50 per cent increase in the number of children in school and said that the number of classes had doubled.

119. In an effort to improve maternal and child health, Burundi had established a national health development policy along with free health care for women giving birth and for children under 5 years of age. The State had also taken steps to encourage birth registration.

120. Turning to the questions about freedom of the press, the delegation said that freedom of expression was enjoyed by everyone, as demonstrated by the large number of private radio stations, television channels and newspapers. Only one journalist was currently in prison, and that was for alleged involvement with armed gangs. There were now no human rights defenders in prison. The delegation repeated that Burundi was working on a new press bill. Also, bills on public assembly, non-profit associations and religious organizations were in the process of adoption. Some of the contentious provisions of the law on public meetings had been removed from the new bill.

121. With regard to discrimination against homosexuals, the delegation acknowledged that the Criminal Code of 2009 still punished homosexuality. That situation was in line with the country's customs and values, and the delegation asked for the international community's understanding while Burundian society prepared for a change in mentality. The head of the delegation did emphasize, however, that he would raise the issue with the Government.

122. The constitutional quota of 30 per cent representation for women in parliament and in the Government was a minimum; the Government favoured broader representation.

123. With regard to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the issue of protection for victims and witnesses, the delegation emphasized that it was aware of the need to adopt a law on that issue. The Government was in the process of drafting such a bill.

124. The Government was considering ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. The country had submitted its periodic reports on the implementation of the Convention against Torture, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.
